Toll May Grow to 58; City Attempts to Avert Collapse of Dam.

Property Damage Put at $10,000,000

State's Worst Disaster of Kind Caused by 9-Inch Downpour.

By the United Press.

Ithaca, N. Y., July 8.—Twenty-three persons were known dead tonight in one of the most devastating floods in the history of New York State.

Approximately 20 additional fatalities were unconfirmed.

Fifteen were reported missing.

Property damage, it was estimated, would exceed $10,000,000. Thousands of acres of farm land and valuable crops were submerged.

List of Known Dead.

The dead:

William Simons, 25, father of five children.

Miss Harriet Garnund, Watkins Glen, school teacher.

Jacob Naronzy, 58, pitcher, farmer.

Albert Bronson Hartfield, Binghamton.

Lillian Giroux, 55, Trumansburg.

John Libbels, 60, Trumansburg.

Alice Ferris, Interlaken.

An unidentified man at Ithaca.

Mrs. Hazel Barrnas, Lisle.

Mrs. Ralph Smith, Lisle.

Two unidentified at Chenango Bridge.

The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Landon, ranging in age from three to six years.

Towns "Wiped Out."

The Landon children were swept to their deaths while sleeping in a tent with their parents, who were camping near Perry City. The parents tried to reach the children but they were swept out of reach and sight by the raging torrents.

The body of Liffles, who had been engaged in rescue work, was recovered three miles from Trumansburg.

Several of the dead were killed by lightning.

The floods followed torrential rains over the week-end, which brought almost nine inches of precipitation.

Thousands of square acres of valuable crops and woodland were ruined. Reports said 30 to 40 bridges collapsed. Hundreds of cottages were destroyed. Scores of others were swept from their foundations into open water.

Red Cross and Salvation Army rescue crews were organized but repeatedly failed to break through to the stricken areas. The forces of all State departments were mobilized to aid destitute hundreds.

Several towns were reported "wiped out completely." Practically every house was swept from its foundation at Trumansburg, N. Y., Justice of the Peace William Allen related. A similar report came from the village of Myers.

Hospitals Without Water.

In several areas rain continued to fall. Local weather stations saw "no relief for at least 24 hours."

Food and water shortages threatened several communities completely isolated by the floods, notably Hornell and Bath.

Several hospitals were without water for drinking and medical use. Contamination of existing water supplies was threatened by shattered mains.

Miles of railroad tracks were washed out. Three passenger trains were stalled and the occupants marooned all night and day. One was near Ithaca and the two others only a mile from Bath.

"This is the worst flood in the history of this city," Mayor Leon F. Wheatley, of Hornell, declared, announcing he had asked the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to make $1,000,000 available here to expedite relief work.

"Two-thirds of this city is under almost 6 feet of water. Scores of cottages have been swept away. We

DR. SARA RUTH DEAN.

Poison Drink Slayer Freed By Governor

Executive of Mississippi Pardons Dr. Dean on New Information.

By the Associated Press.

Jackson, Miss., July 8.—The office of Gov. Sennett Conner today announced the executive had signed a full and complete pardon for Dr. Sara Ruth Dean, Greenwood physician convicted of the poison highball slaying of Dr. John Preston Kennedy, of Greenwood.

Dr. Dean was under a life sentence.

She was convicted at Greenwood a year ago on charges of giving Dr. Kennedy, her former clinical associate, a drink of poisoned whisky at a farewell tryst.

She had denied the charges. The State Supreme Court recently by a 3-to-3 tie decision upheld the sentence, and it was then that she appealed to the Governor for a pardon.

Denies Meeting Him.

The Governor had granted her a 30-day reprieve which was scheduled to expire tonight.

Gov. Conner's brief pardon statement said he took the action because he "had the benefit of information not available to the courts either in the original trial or on appeal."

The State contended Dr. Dean gave the physician, whom she admitted loving previously, the lethal dose because he had planned to rewed his divorced wife, Mrs. Bessie Barry Kennedy.

Dr. Dean denied having had the alleged midnight meeting with Dr. Kennedy and said she had broken her engagement with Dr. Kennedy to marry another man.

Dr. Dean received the news of the Governor's action from her sickbed at her home at Greenwood from her chief counsel, A. F. Gardner.

Love Letters Read.

"The Governor has done justice in this act of mercy," the child specialist said. "I am innocent of the charge that was brought against me."

Dr. Dean's trial of five weeks—one of the longest on record in the State, bared the alleged intimacies of the two physicians. Hundreds of love letters were read.

Two dentist brothers of Dr. Kennedy said he unsuccessfully attempted to treat himself for poison for five days before going to a hospital in Jackson, where he died in five days.

They testified he made a dying declaration accusing Dr. Dean of giving him poison. Numerous physicians also testified.

Italy Believes African Path Is Now Clear

Germany and Russia Are Added to Nations That Won't Interfere.

Road Building Is Rushed in Eritrea to Speed Moving Troops.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Italy, July 8.—Italy believed tonight a path from Rome to Addis Ababa was clear.

Official circles said there was scarcely a possibility of English intervention; there is no doubt of France's friendly neutrality; and the United States has just declared its neutrality.

Germany is now friendly, they said, and Russia will be friendly because of France. The only nation England may possibly persuade to her point of view was believed to be Japan, which has growing commercial interests in Ethiopia, but Japan apparently has her hands full with the Chinese and Manchukuoan situations.

Would Leave League.

There remained only the League of Nations, of which Benito Mussolini has no fear. Before that assembly Italy does not intend to remain on the defensive, but will take the offensive with charges that Ethiopia violated the conditions under which she was permitted to enter and should be reduced to the rank of a mandate.

If the league should attempt to condemn Italy, official circles disclosed, Il Duce would not have the slightest hesitation about leaving Geneva.

The departure of troops for the Italian colonies bordering upon Ethiopia, Eritrea and Italian Somaliland was speeded up. Some 2,000 longshoremen were sent to Massau, Eritrea, to hasten the unloading of troop transports.

Papers Accuse Britain.

Road-building in Eritrea is proceeding under tremendous pressure. Two trunk lines down to the Ethiopian border will be ready by September.

Editorials from authoritative London newspapers telegraphed here indicated England has withdrawn from opposition to Italy's aims. But editorials in afternoon newspapers here left it to be understood England may still try to help Ethiopia indirectly.

The Giornale d'Italia renewed accusations that Britain is furnishing Ethiopia with war materials and is mobilizing troops on the Ethiopian border.

By the Associated Press.

London, July 8.—A reassertion that responsibility for preventing an Italo-Ethiopian war is collective and not an individual one was made to the House of Commons today by Sir Samuel Hoare, foreign secretary.

Opposition members badgered him for information in a renewal of attacks on Britain's recent offer to Mussolini to avert fighting by giving Ethiopia a port.

Frankly conceding he was unable to say under what conditions Italy is prepared to conclude a settlement with Ethiopia, Hoare also admitted he was unable to make a statement on the government's position until Thursday.

His attitude was interpreted as meaning Britain has almost given up hope that France would step in and help shoulder the League of Nations' responsibilities, although other quarters said England has not regarded war as inevitable.

By the Associated Press.

Scheveningen, The Netherlands, July 8.—Prediction was made freely tonight that the conciliation commission meeting here in an effort to settle the Italo-Ethiopia dispute would collapse tomorrow.

Its end was foreseen in the refusal of the Italian members to hear witnesses for Ethiopia.

At this afternoon's meeting an effort to break down the deadlock which began yesterday ended in failure. It was reported that an angry scene developed when Prof. Jeze, legal adviser to the Ethiopian government, declared that Ualual, where the first major frontier clash occurred, was Ethiopian territory.

The Italian members promptly registered a fiery protest, insisting that the commission was empowered to consider only the causes of the incidents, not the delimitation of the frontier. They refused to hear further evidence from Prof. Jeze, although he continued serenely to expound his views.

Roosevelt vs. Roosevelt

Institute Gives New Deal Foe Cool Reception

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

A Staff Correspondent.

Charlottesville, Va., July 8.—Sharp and scathing denunciation of the major policies of the Roosevelt Administration by a distant cousin of the President today marked the opening of a week's discussion of "The Constitution and the New Deal" at the historic University of Virginia's Institute of Public Affairs.

Detailed to the task by the American Liberty League, which is cooperating in the conduct of this round-table discussion, Nicholas Roosevelt, former Minister to Hungary and now on the editorial staff of a New York paper, was the first critic of the New Deal. But he found he had no actual antagonist in the ring against him.

Defaulting on today's program, as it has on several occasions at the institute, the New Deal did not detail an adversary for Roosevelt. But the audience, somewhat small due to the presence of Pearl Buck, the novelist, at another round table, came to the defense of the New Deal and Roosevelt was barraged with hostile questions.

Comprising persons from all parts of the country, the audience seemed little impressed by Roosevelt's fears that the country was heading for an "economic dictatorship."

Pearl Buck Draws Crowd.

Charles W. Putnam, an assistant NRA administrator, appeared to challenge Roosevelt's contentions. But he was pushed into the line-up only a day or two ago and commenced his talk by asserting he had not come to debate with anyone but to give an exposition of the NRA. His talk did not cross the Roosevelt attack at any point.

Miss Buck, who spoke twice during the day—this morning at a round table and again this evening in a more formal address—was the center of attention wherever she went. Her topic at the round table was "The Psychological Setting of the Far East," while this evening she described the "Like and Unlike in East and West."

At other round tables American membership in the international labor office, America's cultural debt to Germany, religious questions and taxation were discussed. At the latter discussion President Roosevelt's proposed graduated income tax on

'Spare None' Utility Lobby Inquiry Voted

Effort to Narrow Scope Is Overwhelmingly Overridden.

The House, last night, by a voice vote, empowered its Rules Committee with full authority to proceed this morning with a thorough investigation of utilities lobbying both for and against the Administration, with the sweeping right of subpena.

Following a milder resolution adopted last week, the action was taken on the plea of Representative John J. O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, that he "would spare no one" in the committee's search for evidence of "influenced votes" on the Administration's utility holding company bill.

A short but brisk effort to narrow the scope of the investigation was overwhelmingly overriden, as members moved quickly to beat the Senate to full inquiry into charges and counter-charges of utilities bill lobbying.

Brewster First Witness.

The House Accounts Committee will be called into session today to pass on a second resolution providing $50,000 to finance the latest lobby hunt. A resolution to appropriate $150,000 to finance a parallel investigation on the other side of the Capitol, is still pending in the Senate.

Representative Ralph O. Brewster (Republican), of Maine, will be the first witness called before the House Committee this morning, Chairman O'Connor announced.

Brewster, a former Governor of Maine, charged last week that Thomas Corcoran, RFC attorney and one of the authors of the Wheeler-Rayburn utility holding company bill, used "threats" in an effort to persuade him to cast his vote for the Administration's proposed "death sentence" for "unnecessary" utility holding companies.

Brewster claimed Corcoran threatened to stop work on the Passamaquoddy "tide-harnessing" project in Maine unless he voted for the so-called "death sentence" amendment. Corcoran was "invited" to appear before the committee this morning.

An effort by Representative Tom Blanton (Democrat), of Texas, to stop action on the broad House resolution, was thrust aside, despite plans of the Texan that "this is simply a question of veracity between the gentleman from Maine (Brewster), and Mr. Corcoran."

O'Connor Insistent.

"This is more than a question of veracity between any two persons," Chairman O'Connor insisted. "We propose to see it through and see what propaganda and what influences have been used in this House on both sides of the question.

"I never saw Mr. Corcoran and I never saw one of these so-called 'power buzzards' that are alleged to be around here, but if they are here, we want to find out who they are."

Blanton insisted that in 20 years at the Capitol he "had never seen anything come out of a congressional investigation."

"Suppose you do find that Corcoran is guilty of these charges," Blanton asked, "what would you do about it?"

"He would be confronted with a penal statute that makes that sort of thing a crime," O'Connor retorted.

The resolution was drawn and adopted following a meeting of the Rules Committee which recommended such action. The resolution adopted last week would have confined the inquiry to the utility

Morgenthau Presents Tax Schedules to Net Up to $901,500,000

Varied Estimates Are Prepared, With Low at $118,000,000.

Secretary Urges Use to Cut Debt

He Would Offset Cost of Recovery Program by New Revenue.

Summary of Mr. Morgenthau's Tax Proposals—Page 9.

By Robert C. Albright.

Earmarking of the President's projected "share-the-wealth" revenues to scale down indebtedness incurred by the Government's vast spending program yesterday was proposed by Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., as Congress came to grips with a belated tax program that may indefinitely delay adjournment.

Caught between a bitter partisan cross-fire in the House Ways and Means Committee, Morgenthau carefully declined an indorsement of rates, insisted he was interested primarily in revenue, but advised against "undesirable social consequences." He urged "reshaping our tax structure along sounder and fairer lines."

A wide range of wealth-sharing schedules prepared by the committee's tax experts would yield revenues ranging from $118,000,000 to $901,500,000, he disclosed. It was up to Congress, he said in effect, to make its own choice.

Hearings Scheduled.

Hurriedly attempting to rush through a tax bill before autumn leaves are flying, Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee, scheduled companion hearings opening the middle of the week. House Ways and Means Committeemen sought to bring their own hearing to a close within the week, confining the program, at the President's request, to four cardinal points in Mr. Roosevelt's tax measure.

Contending the worst of the depression is now over, Secretary Morgenthau told the group that the time has come to take definite steps toward meeting current expenditures, discontinuing the practice of charging off to the public debt the heavy outlays of the emergency program.

In what was viewed as an effort to bolster confidence in the fiscal policies of the Administration, Morgenthau said "the Treasury's first concern is with the adequacy of the national revenue.

"There are times of emergency when the Treasury must finance expenditures in excess of income by borrowings which increase the public debt. But the national welfare demands that, when such an emergency has passed, sufficient income be raised to meet current expenditures and to make substantial reductions in the debt.

"The Time Has Come."

"The time has come to move in that direction."

Secretary Morgenthau disclosed that the committee was considering 18 varied schedules for inheritance and gift taxes, six different methods of taxing the larger incomes, three proposed schedules for gradauting corporation income levies, and a fourth method of partly removing the present total taxe exemption from dividends received by corporations.

As outlined by Morgenthau, they would produce the following range of revenues:

	Minimum	Maximum
Inheritance and gift taxes	$7,000,000	$128,000,000
Higher rates on large incomes	5,000,000	32,500,000
Graduated corporation taxes	67,000,000	102,000,000
Removing exemption from dividends received by corporations	39,000,000	39,000,000
Totals	$118,000,000	$901,500,000

His formal statement completed, Secretary Morgenthau faced a battery of questions from Republican members of the committee. For the most part he declined to enlarge on his earlier remarks, and several times it was necessary for Demo-

Tax Checkup Drive to Give 4,000 Work

By Felix Bruner.

Four thousand "white collar" relief roll workers will be employed by the Treasury Department to check up liquor tax, "nuisance" tax and small income tax payments, it was announced yesterday.

The works program allotment board recommended to President Roosevelt yesterday that $5,113,126 be turned over to the Internal Revenue Bureau from the works fund to pay for this service. It was said that the work is expected to pay for itself several times in collection of delinquent taxes.

In the past the Treasury Department, except in instances in which there obviously was some irregularity or mistake, has not been checking small income returns. The relief workers are expected to be employed checking recent returns of persons with incomes of $25,000 and less and to report for adjustment any errors thus discovered. This check will be made in all the States. For this purpose an allotment of $1,577,894 was recommended.

To Inspect Liquor Stores.

In checking up liquor taxes the relief workers are expected to visit all the liquor stores in every city of more than 100,000 population in the 32 wet States. They will determine whether tax and other Treasury regulations are being observed. In this connection the Treasury has incorporated in its regulations a number of those promulgated by the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, which ceased to function when the NRA was outlawed by the Supreme Court.

A similar check-up has been made in some cities by the Treasury. It was stated that the check has resulted in revenue equaling two and one-half times the cost of the work. For this check-up the allotment board recommended the Treasury be given $1,086,941.

The third check will cover so-called nuisance taxes, including gasoline taxes, admission taxes, on club dues, cosmetics, sporting goods and other assessments. The allotment board asked the President to set aside $2,448,290 for this purpose.

The allotment of $5,113,126 means that the cost of the work will average nearly $1,300 per persons, far above the average anticipated for white collar workers and above the average of $1,143 per person fixed for all work projects by President Roosevelt.

Coast Guard Gets Funds.

Included also in the allotments recommended yesterday was $5,263,995 for 48 Coast Guard projects, including construction of cutters, building repairs and improvements and work on radio stations and equipment.

The Bureau of Animal Industry will be given $1,454,000 for cattle tick eradication in the South, if the President approves an allotment board recommendation.

Immediate start on the huge Central Valley reclamation project was assured with the setting aside of $100,000,000 for reclamation work under the Interior Department. It was explained that this sum is the maximum that will be spent for reclamation and that it will include the cost of projects already started. New projects must be approved individually and they will be paid for from the $100,000,000 fund.

To meet the objections that while the Agriculture Department is taking land out of production the reclamation projects are adding more land, it was agreed that for every acre made suitable for crops under the reclamation program, its equivalent in submarginal land, based on crop yield, must be taken out of production.

Pearson Used A Spy System, Yates Charges

Ousted Aid of Governor of Virgin Isles Submits Case to Senators.

By the Associated Press.

Paul C. Yates, discharged assistant of Gov. Paul M. Pearson of the Virgin Islands, in support of his charges of island maladministration, yesterday told Senate investigators of an "espionage" system employed against political enemies of the Pearson administration.

Yates, former Texas newspaperman, was the first complaining witness to present charges against the 64-year-old governor. His left eye was still blackened from the fist fight he had with Robert S. Allen, Washington columnist, on the opening day of the Senate probe.

Incident after incident was related by Yates in the suffocating committee room in an effort to support his charges of corruption, neglect and failure in the regime of the mild-mannered Republican governor.

Priests Enter Discussion.

He cited a letter sent to Representative Caroline O'Day (Democrat), New York, purportedly by Catholic fathers in the islands, protesting the proposed establishment of the so-called Virgin Island Co., a rehabilitation plan organized by Pearson and the Interior Department.

"When Gov. Pearson showed me that letter," Yates testified, "he told me he had ways and means of getting letters from his enemies. He said the Catholic fathers were among the worst of his enemies in the islands. He led me to believe he had an espionage system which would uncover all base things against him."

Yates' testimony came after a Federal judge of the Virgin Islands District Court had charged that he was threatened with being "put on the spot" in the press unless he granted a new hearing to a Government employe under indictment for theft of lumber and cement belonging to the Government.

Judge T. Webber Wilson, former member of Congress from Mississippi, said Morris Ernst, counsel for the Americal Civil Liberties Union in New York, had made the threats. He asserted also there had been "administrative interference" with his work.

Ernst late in the day wired Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, chairman of the investigating committee, that Wilson had spread "half truths and actual fab-

Pirates Board Gaming Barge, Chain Crew and Seize $32,000

By the Associated Press.

Long Beach, Calif., July 8.—Black-hooded pirates, carrying chains and leg irons to fasten their victims, today raided the luxurious gambling barge, Monte Carlo, and escaped with loot estimated at $32,000 in cash and jewelry.

Ed Turner, owner of the barge, reported to officers that five men, wearing black silk stockings over their heads, swarmed aboard the boat during a dense fog and quickly chained 13 members of the crew.

The Monte Carlo is anchored about 4 miles off the coast and the raid occurred at 4 a. m., after patrons had been taken ashore in launches.

Turner said J. M. Keller, ship cashier, was forced to surrender the cash and jewelry. The boat owner estimated the plunder at $22,000 in cash and $10,000 in jewelry left by patrons as security.

The raiders, Turner reported, were heavily armed with revolvers and sawed-off shotguns.

"Stick 'em up and be quiet," the pirates commanded as they climbed aboard.

They swept past the unsuspecting deck crew and then placed the irons and handcuffs on the bartenders and janitors at work in the barroom.

"We won't hurt you if you keep quiet," the pirate leader told Keller, who was at work with his wife, a bookkeeper, in the steel-walled counting room.

Forcing Mrs. Keller to lie on the floor, they made Keller keep his hands elevated while the safe was looted.

The Monte Carlo, a former seagoing liner about 400 feet long, is anchored far at sea to escape jurisdiction of Long Beach and California antigambling laws.

Under cover of darkness, the pirates approached the Monte Carlo in a fishing boat. Others remained in the boat while the five robbers went aboard.

After their escape the Coast Guard was notified, as the distance at sea made the raid an act of piracy.

Long Beach police were requested to guard landing places.

First Heart Balm in History Of Arlington Won by Girl, 17

For some reason—the chivalry of its men, maybe, or the beauty of its women—Virginia rarely has a breach of promise trial. Until yesterday Arlington County never had had one.

The legal ice was broken by a 17-year-old girl, Edith Blanche Foster, of Luray, who sued William V. Wells, of Cherrydale, for $5,000 balm.

A jury in the Circuit Court of Judge Walter T. McCarthy returned a verdict for Miss Foster, but awarded her damges of $300.

The jilted girl, an attractive blonde, had been employed in Wells' home in Cherrydale. In the course of her three months' stay there, she and Wells became engaged.

After she returned to her home in Luray, it was brought out in court, Wells wrote Miss Foster a letter saying he thought they had been too hasty, that he was not ready to settle down and that he was not making enough money. Wells is employed in the Department of Agriculture at $1,600 a year.

Wells' lawyers offered in evidence a letter which Miss Foster sent in reply, one which they contended gave the Agriculture employe his release from the engagement. This said that if Wells felt as he said he did, then they had best not marry.

But Miss Foster's letter had this postscript:

"Please come back to me."

But we didn't even lift an eyebrow. We've seen it happen too many times before.

Roosevelt Planning to Attend Milwaukee Democratic Parley

President Roosevelt yesterday tentatively agreed to attend a meeting of the Young Democratic Clubs at Milwaukee August 23. He is expected to stop at Milwaukee on his way to the San Diego Exposition.

It was stated at the White House, however, that definite plans for the trip will depend upon adjournment of Congress and it may be necessary to postpone the journey until later in the summer or fall. He definitely intends to make the trip to San Diego, however.

While no engagements have been made by the President other than his tentative agreement to visit the Milwaukee meeting, it is possible he may make some other speeches along the way, possibly in the nature of short extemporaneous talks.

The trip also is expected to include a trip to Boulder Dam on the Colorado River, now nearing completion.

After he reaches the Pacific Coast it is probable that President Roosevelt will take an ocean cruise and he may return by way of the Panama Canal.

The President's trip will follow a similar journey by Postmaster General Farley, who with Mrs. Farley will attend the [illegible] and then go to Hawaii.

While the President was described as anxious to avoid having political significance attached to his trip, both he and Farley will have an opportunity to size up the situation in the West preliminary to the coming campaign.

Vare Opponent Hits Old Guard Party Leaders

Carroll Tells Cleveland Conference Youth Could Build Winner.

By the United Press.

Cleveland, July 8.—Charles W. Carroll, of Philadelphia, leader of the young Republican movement in Pennsylvania and arch-foe of the dethroned Vare-Grundy organization, took the Republican Party apart, piece by piece, tonight to see what could be done to place it back in power in 1936.

Making the keynote speech before the regional convention of the Republican Crusaders Congress, with delegates from six Mid-Western States, Carroll admitted he found many things not to his liking.

He concluded, however, that the party had a "Rock of Gibraltar foundation" upon which the youth of the Nation probably could build a winning political organization.

Lists Shortcomings.

Carroll was outspoken in listing the Republican shortcomings, but he hastened to blame most of them on "old guard" party leaders whom he has fought bitterly for years.

"We find in general (in the Republican Party), a leadership which practices 'dictation from the top down, ignoring expression of opinion from the bottom up,'" he said. "Our leaders no longer are in touch with the people."

Carroll said the republican tickets had been "burdened by shop-worn and moth-eaten candidates" and attacked the policy whereby office holders "swap around from one job to another."

The third charge against the party he listed as attempts of State and local committees to "hand-pick" candidates.

"In many cases where the winner in the primary was a hand-picked candidate of the organization, the losers became so incensed that they refused to go along with us and retaliated by temporarily turning to our opposing party."

"Democrats Worse."

After tearing his own organization apart, Carroll turned to the Democratic party and decided it was in even worse shape, because "the foundation is cracked and damaged beyond repair."

"They whitewashed the upper structure, but the foundation laid by Thomas Jefferson will never be recognizable again," he said. "The cornerstones of free speceh and States rights, of representative government, private ownership, sound money and personal liberty have all been demolished."

The conference was conceived and pushed through to conclusion by George H. Bender, former State Senator, despite cold water thrown on his plans by the State and national Republican organizations. In his opening speech, Bender branded the New Deal a "Mis-Deal."

"Rome is burning and we've got a lot of fiddlers fiddling," he shouted. "They've got the worst political machine in history down in Washington. They've loaded the pay rolls with a lot of political papsuckers. They've got so many their feet are sticking out of the windows."

The convention will conclude with two sessions tomorrow. Approximately 2,000 delegates and visitors are present from Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Michigan and Pennsylvania.

Congress Liberals Shy at Third Party

By the Associated Press.

A partial poll of liberal members of Congress disclosed yesterday a lack of enthusiasm for the American Commonwealth Political Federation, formed at Chicago Saturday and charged with the job of organizing a left-wing third party by 1936.

The consensus seemed to be that the Chicago meeting had acted too hastily without a representative expression of opinion from the Nation's liberal leadership.

Representative Marcantonio (Republican), New York, who was active in sponsoring the Chicago meeting and who walked out in disagreement when it was decided to launch the party at once, expressed the opinion that the gathering had exceeded its avowed purpose. The meeting, he said, had been called simply for discussion of third party possibilities and was not supposed to take precipitate action.

There was evidence, too, that a majority of Wisconsin progressives were opposed to formation of a third party at this time, although Representative Thomas Amlie, one of their number, was named chairman of the newly formed federation. All but Amlie stayed away from the meeting, including Representative Schneider who joined Amlie and four other House members in singing the call.

Representative Lemke (Republican), North Dakota, called the action "premature," asserting that political parties are not organized through the "actions of a few individuals ambitious for office." He expressed the belief that no successful national third party could be organized without drawing upon the followers of Senator Long (Democrat), Louisiana, and Father Charles E. Coughlin as well as members of the National Farmers' Union.

Dad Sold Her for $125, 11-Year-Old Girl Claims

Atlanta, July 8 (AP).—An 11-year-old girl today told Juvenile Court authorities here a story of having been "sold" by her father to a 35-year-old Chattanooga, Tenn., man for $125, part of which she said was used to purchase a second-hand automobile for their honeymoon.

At a hearing before Juvenile Court Judge Garland Watkins she said she was married last September 14 at Rossville, to a man whose name she said was Bale Hopkins, of Chattanooga.

Before the ceremony, the girl testified she overheard her father and the groom-to-be close a deal whereby $125 would be paid for her hand.

Roosevelt's Plan to Tour Nation Appears Wise So That He May Regain Contact With Voters.

By Raymond Clapper

THE trip across the country which President Roosevelt intends to make after Congress adjourns is one of the two things that, from his point of view, seem highly necessary.

Every indication points to the fact that the country is losing contact with him. For months it followed the spectacular New Deal show closely. Whenever Mr. Roosevelt spoke to the country or to Congress, the White House was flooded with enthusiastic mail. Members of Congress who showed the slightest resistance were showered with indignant letters. Now they defy him with impunity. Every private check-up reveals either apathy or opposition. The public has wearied of the show and lost the thread of the plot. One proposal after another has rolled from the White House to Congress. Policies have been changed so often, as in the works program, that nobody even here in Washington can follow what is going on. For the country at large Washington is a spectacle of dizzy confusion that is no longer as interesting as it once was. People find it difficult to understand what Mr. Roosevelt is doing.

* * *

Hence, it is as necessary now as it was in the infant days of the New Deal that the President take the time and care to explain his program if he wants it understood and supported. Also to get out into the country, where he can be seen and heard, where people can judge for themselves whether he has the cool, firm grasp on the situation that they originally felt he had.

* * *

The other thing that seems highly essential, from Mr. Roosevelt's point of view, is to concentrate on administration. The works program is the most glaring instance of haphazard planning which necessitated frequent changes of policy. Furthermore, legislation now maturing, such as the social security measure, the utilities bill, the Wagner disputes bill and liquor control, will require the most painstaking and thorough administration. Careful appointment of personnel and industrious ground work in setting up the administrative machinery and regulations are of utmost importance in getting these undertakings off to a sound start.

AAA has boosted the 1935 wheat benefit payment to 33 cents a bushel. Last year it was 29 cents and in 1933 it was 28 cents. Instead of going down, the Government's payment to wheat farmers is going up. A jump of 4 cents a bushel is enough to make a Democrat out of the most unreconstructed Republican in bleeding Kansas.

The average farm price of wheat in April was 90 cents a bushel, as against 68 cents in April, 1934. In May it was 87 cents, as compared with 69 cents a year ago. The June average was 77 cents, as compared with 79 cents in June, 1934. Apparently the Department of Agriculture expects declining prices.

If three years of crop curtailment is not going to steady the price so that it won't be necessary to hike the farm subsidy each year, where will it stop? The 29-cent processing tax is yielding enough so that AAA could boost the payment this year. So AAA did that instead of cutting the processing tax. Won't it burn up the millers who are already in court trying to wriggle out of paying the tax to see the farmers pocketing 4 cents more a bushel while they receive no cut at all?

* * *

The Government has dipped into the works relief fund to earmark $100,000,000 for reclamation. A fat chunk of this will go to California. This was announced the day after President Roosevelt and Senator Hiram Johnson, California's Roosevelt Republican, returned from a week-end yachting trip together.

* * *

Last December Relief Administrator Hopkins announced some 4,000,000 unemployables would be turned back to the States and be cared for locally. That was to be done by February 1. Now the 4,000,000 are still on the Federal Government's hands. It is hoped, officials say, that the social security act eventually will take care of them. Everyone hopes so.

* * *

And another works project is being started that will interest a large number of persons. The Treasury has been allotted $1,500,000 with which to put 4,000 white-collar unemployed checking taxes. If by any chance you have been earning less than $25,000 a year, they will examine your income tax return. Very privately, the Treasury has in the past let the returns under $25,000 slide through. With a limited force it was necessary to concentrate on the big shots.

If you charged up gas for the family car as a necessary business expense, watch out.

Dr. Rex Tugwell is keeping his Rural Resettlement publicity men quiet. He doesn't want any publicity around Washington. The less said the better in view of the overballyhoo of the Subsistence Homesteads and the failure to come up to advance billings. Dr. Tugwell prefers to let the news of his Resettlement Administration work come out in the localities where it operates. The comment there is likely to be more favorable than from faraway city dwellers.

John Dickinson, one of the New Dealers who has kept his feet on the ground, is being promoted from a largely futile existence as Assistant Secretary of Commerce to a real job as head of the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice. One of the best legal experts in the Government, he'll be right at home in the Department of Justice.

Restoration of the anti-trust laws through the collapse of NRA means that this will become again an important center of legal activity. As Dickinson is not a crusader but a former law professor and economist with a cautious, judicial mind, the chances are that the revival of the anti-trust laws will proceed by sure-footed preparation of cases rather than in flashy crusading on uncertain evidence.

The Republican national committee apparently is willing to let bygones be bygones so far as Senator Borah is concerned. Recently he was demanding the reorganization of the committee and the ousting of Fletcher. Now Fletcher's committee has made a party pamphlet out of Borah's recent address on the Constitution. Maybe that will quiet him.

For years Vice President Garner has been impatient every spring for Congress to adjourn so he could rush back to Texas and rough it. Now he's becoming soft. Suspecting that Congress will remain here for some weeks, he has persuaded his hotel to put air-cooling in his suite.

N. Y. Police Shuffled To 'Pep-Up' Vice Drive

New York, July 8 (AP).—A police shake-up and vigorous assurances of co-operation gave impetus today to the forthcoming special prosecution of vice and rackets by Thomas E. Dewey.

Police Commissioner Lewis Valentine announced reorganization of the police detective division to "pep things up" after Assistant Chief Inspector John J. Sullivan was promoted to second deputy police commissioner, being superseded by veteran Henry Bruckman, former acting deputy chief inspector. In swearing in the new police officers, Mayor LaGuardia recommended a city force of "G-men," responsible only to the mayor's office.

Borah Assails Idea of Judges As Candidates

Mention of Justices Is Called 'Sinister,' and 'Low Strategy.'

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 8.—Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, in a letter to the New York Herald Tribune today launched a bitter attack on those who would choose a presidential candidate from the Supreme Court bench.

He called such a move "low political strategy which would seek to rebuild party fortunes by sinister maneuvers."

The letter follows:

"Those who have any proper conception of the true function of the Supreme Court in our framework of government, or those who have regard for the high place it must at all times hold in the hearts and minds of the American people—if it is to perform with effect that function—will deeply regret the talk about going to the membership of that tribunal for a presidential candidate.

"And those who have any appreciation whatever of the delicate but inevitable and stupendous task which awaits the court in dealing with the problems which must of necessity come before it in one of the most onerous and difficult periods of its existence will look with contempt upon the low political strategy which would seek to rebuild party fortunes by any such sinister maneuvers.

Two Justices Mentioned.

"The names of two members of the Supreme Court have been particularly mentioned. They have undoubtedly been mentioned because of recent opinions, which opinions happen to coincide with what the fertile brains of the political strategists think will make for party advantage.

"We can pass over the chagrin and humiliation which must come to a judge when singled out for political advancement because of the solemn discharge of his duty of a Justice of the Supreme Court.

"But there is something more involved than this. It is not only for a suggestion of political recompense for deciding the question in a particular way, but it is a subtle suggestion to all members of the court that in rendering opinions on constitutional law, they should keep in mind not only the law, but also the reward which awaits those who—while interpreting the Constitution—also interpret popular sentiment.

"It is not only indispensable to the worth and dignity of the court that it is, in fact, free from party bias, but second only in importance is that the people should believe it to be free from party bias.

Similar Case After Civil War.

"After the Civil War, Congress—still saturated with war passion and still moved with sectional distrust—undertook to establish what amounted to a permanent military government over the Southern States.

"Never was a Constitution more brutally trampled under foot than during this so-called Reconstruction Period. Some of these laws finally reached the Supreme Court.

"It was the only tribunal left for those whose liberties had been denied them. When the court passed upon some of these measures and held them unconstitutional, the court was bitterly assailed.

"Finally, the Congress withdrew jurisdiction in some respects and, having no power to secure relief, men remained in prison with no more remedy for relief than had the prisoner of Chillon.

"Then came proposals for reform. The court was to be made amenable to political control. It was proposed that the membership of the court be changed; that the court be denied power to pass upon the constitutionality of the acts of Congress; that no statute could be held unconstitutional by less than two-thirds of the justices, and finally, that particular statutes were to be exempt from consideration by the court.

Decry Attacks on Court.

"Some of these proposals met the approval of one or the other branches of Congress. The opinions of the Supreme Court written in those days are now regarded as the bulwarks of American liberty.

"The sorry record of Congress—and a large part of the press—in attacks upon the court constitutes a rather sad record in the political history of the United States.

"The point is that in every great crisis of our history realization comes to us of how plain is our duty to keep the courts as free from party politics as it is humanly possible.

"There are many different ways to draw the court into politics. One is to regard it as a source for political candidates.

"No one can be indifferent to the supreme task of the court in periods of great stress. To seek party advantages by reason of opinions rendered in such instances is nothing less than an attack upon the court itself.

"The political party which would make an issue of constitutional government and at the same time seek the court for political leadership would reveal either gross indifference to what constitutes constitutional government, or a willingness to sacrifice its most vital principle for party advantage."

Yates Alleges Pearson Used Political Spies

rications on the record" in relation to his defense of Leonard MacIntosh, island employe accused of stealing lumber and cement.

Ernst asked that he be allowed to tell how Judge Wilson "acted as thirteenth juror and prosecutor" in the MacIntosh case. The judge, he added, had once told him he took the job only to pay off political debts exceeding $12,000.

Yates said Allen, who collaborates in writing a Washington column with Drew Pearson, son of the Governor, had told him the job as assistant to Pearson was available.

"When I accepted the position," he said, "I was led by Pearson to believe that the chief opposition to his administration was from the big land holders, the old Danish element. When I got there I found the Governor had put the cart before the horse. There was no support from the masses of the people. Gov. Pearson's friends were a small group of controling business men, especially in St. Thomas."

He testified he had talked with several executives of the Roosevelt Administration before going to the islands and had been told by some of them that Pearson was regarded as a "weak administrator."

He said he talked with Rexford G. Tugwell, Undersecretary of Agriculture, who told him that "Pearson is a very good man but a very poor administrator."

He said Oscar Chapman, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and Michael Strauss, of the PWA, had "told me the same thing."

"How about Secretary Ickes?" asked Edward J. Colgan, Baltimore counsel for the Senate investigators. "Did you talk with him?"

"Yes, I had a conversation with him. * * * He said he thought he had made a mistake in consenting to the transfer of the islands courts to the Justice Department and it was unfortunate that Wilson (Judge Wilson) was a Southerner and possibly prejudiced aganist the island people.

A reference to an article in The Nation, of which Dr. Ernest Gruening, chief of the Interior Department's division of territory and island possessions, was editor, caused Gruening to rise in his own defense.

Isadore Goldstrum, another counsel for the Senate Committee, referred to an article called "Justice in the Virgin Islands," published in The Nation in January of this year. This was after the alleged threats had been made by Ernst. Goldstrum said he had understood it was written by Dr. Gruening.

"I did not write the article," asserted Gruening, who had been present listening to the testimony. "I was an editor of The Nation from 1920 to 1933, but had nothing to do with it at the time the article was published."

The article, later introduced in testimony, said:

"The Virgin Islands may be a long way from Washington, but in one respect it is close to Nazi Germany—this in the administration of District Judge T. Webber Wilson, in a case which promises to become notorious in American jurisprudence."

Speaking of the "celebrated" MacIntosh case, The Nation article said he was accused of using $11 worth of Government lumber and some cement.

Senator Tydings remarked at the time that he detected nothing in the article that reflected upon Judge Wilson, although "there are some things that may reflect upon others."

Wheat Benefit Price for 1935 To Be 33 Cents

Cotton Acreage Increase Over Last Year Reported by Government.

By the Associated Press.

A proclamation fixing the minimum 1935 wheat benefit payments at 33 cents a bushel was signed by Secretary Wallace yesterday shortly after the Agriculture Department reported an acreage increase in another crop on which it operates a control plan—cotton.

The department reported that on July 1 cotton acreage in cultivation totaled 29,166,000 acres, an increase of 4.6 per cent over last year.

The wheat payments on this year's crop will be an increase of at least 4 cents a bushel over the 1934 minimum of 29 cents. The AAA said this should mean an additional income to producers of approximatley $14,000,000.

$115,000,000 to Be Paid.

The AAA estimated that benefit payments to wheat farmers at the 33 cent rate on the 1935 crop should amount to at least $115,000,000, compared to approximately $100,000,000 which would have been paid at the 29-cent rate. The rate of payment on the first program in 1933 was 28 cents.

No change was made in the processing tax rate of 30 cents a bushel. The AAA said the money for the increased payments was obtrained through tax collections on wheat produced by farmers not under allotment contracts, and that sufficient funds now are available to meet the increase.

Two Installments.

The 1935 payments, the AAA said, will be made in two installments. The first will be at the rate of 20 cents a bushel on allotments. The final payment will be made when local administrative costs for the 1935-36 fiscal year have been determined and deductions made. Officials said it might be increased above 13 cents if the difference between the average farm price and wheat parity price for the current marketing year is more than 33 cents a bushel.

Estimates of payments to States on a 33-cent basis included:

Maryland, $946,000; Virginia, $649,000.

Acreage Reduced.

In reporting on cotton acreage, the department said that the July 1 cultivated acreage was 28.6 per cent less than the five-year average from 1929-33. Increases were reported for all major States except Oklahoma, ranging from 4 per cent in North Carolina to 10 per cent in Louisiana. A decrease of 7 per cent was reported for Oklahoma, partially because of unfavorable weather and partially because of a relatively high percentage of acreage under contract for the first time.

Williams Asks Senate to Send AAA Bill Back

Ex-NRA Head Assails 'Mystery' Revisions in Recommital Plea.

Renewing his attack on the proposed AAA amendments, S. Clay Williams, chairman of the board of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., and former head of the NRA, in a memorandum addressed to the Senate yesterday, asked that the amendments be sent back to the Agriculture Committee for hearings.

The memorandum supplemented a brief Williams filed last week in which he denounced the amendments as being revolutionary in character and a complete departure from the original agricultural act, which he said he favored.

His attack was aimed chiefly at the provision altering the processing tax section so that these levies need not be eliminated by attainment of parity price levels. The same provision was attacked in the Senate yesterday by Senator W. E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, who introduced two amendments to the provision, one to eliminate that section and another to eliminate the provision that would bar court action for recovery of processing taxes if they should be held unconstitutional.

Williams charged that AAA officials have resorted to "subtlety and mystery" to cover up the real purposes of the amendments. He said the amendments had been deliberately misrepresented to members of the House and Senate Agriculture Committees.

"If the proposals were all right generally and were in the interest of the farmers there could be no legitimate need for subtlety and secretiveness and craftiness of method on the part of the AAA in any of its work with the committee or with Congress," Williams said.

"If those amendments could be shown to be for the general good and in the interest of the farmers, why was it deemed advisable by AAA to try to hide their revolutionary character under a claim that they were intended only to 'clarify and simplify and strengthen the original act?'" he asked.

"If these amendments could stand the light of public comment, including that of the farmer, after they are understood, why has AAA been so insistently opposed to public hearings and to anybody except their own representatives getting before the committees which are working on the bill? It is notorious that the AAA representatives have been sitting continuously with the committees behind closed doors which excluded all other interested parties."

Ex-Bank President Starts Jail Term

Hargraves to Serve 3 Years for Misapplying Funds.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, July 8.—Federal Judge George Cosgrave today ordered Richard L. Hargreaves, former son-in-law of the late William Jennings Bryan, committed to McNeil Island Penitentiary to serve a three-year sentence for misapplication of funds.

Hargreaves was convicted of misapplication and of making false statements to the comptroller of currency about the condition of the First National Bank of Beverly Hills, now defunct, of which he was president.

Judge Cosgrave denied Hargreaves' plea for probation, which was backed by many prominent persons including Will Hays, motion picture czar; Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, United States ambassador to Denmark; Mayor C. W. Bryan, of Lincoln, Nebr., Gov. Cochran, of Nebraska and others.

With the convicted banker as he heard the court's decision, were his wife, the former Helen Ferguson, screen actress, and his two children by a previous marriage to the late Grace Bryan Hargreaves. The children are Margaret and Bryan Hargreaves, grandchildren of William Jennings Bryan.

Mrs. Waley to Face Seventy Witnesses

Kidnaper Husband to Be Her Only Aid.

By the Associated Press.

Tacoma, Wash., July 8.—It will be 2 witnesses against 70 tomorrow when plump, blonde Margaret Waley begins her fight against conviction in the George Weyerhaeuser kidnaping.

That became apparent tonight when the defense indicated finally that only Kidnaper Herman W. Waley—husband of the 19-year-old defendant—will testify with her.

The Government, on the other hand, marshaled at least 70 witnesses for the effort to prove Mrs. Waley guilty of conspiring to kidnap and kidnaping the 9-year-old timber fortune heir.

Government attorneys met behind locked doors to organize the evidence they will present to the Federal Court jury of 11 men (one an alternate) and 2 women selected last Friday.

Waley will be brought here from nearby McNeil Island Federal Penitentiary, where he has started a 45-year sentence on a plea of guilty to the kidnap and conspiracy indictment.

U.S. Millionaire And Secretary Wed in London

George Washington Hill Culminates Romance in Registry Office.

By the Associated Press.

London, July 8.—A business office romance resulted in the marriage today of George Washington Hill, "million-dollar-a-year" American tobacco executive, and his secretary, Mary Barnes.

The 50-year-old president of the American Tobacco Co. and Miss Barnes, 39, were wed in the Caxton Hall register office with nine relatives and friends in attendance.

After the brief ceremony Hill gave his bride an affectionate kiss as they passed Buckingham Palace in a taxicab en route to a downtown hotel. The guests followed in other taxis to a champagne party at the hotel.

"I don't know our plans, but I can say I am darned happy," asserted the executive.

Mrs. Hill with difficulty controlled her emotion as they faced a barage of cameras outside the registry office. But she regained her composure when the couple left and they posed for more pictures before entering the hotel.

Although British law prescribes that the civil ceremony be held "with open doors," the registry office lobby was cleared just before Hill's arrival of spectators who had witnessed previous weddings.

For fees and the license the "million dollar a year" executive paid out £2, 14 shillings, 7 pence, or about $13.25.

Nazis to Raise Navy Strength 107,500 Tons

New Ships to Be Built This Year in Compliance With Anglo-German Pact.

By the United Press.

Berlin, July 8.—Germany moved today to put the recently negotiated Anglo-German naval agreement into effect by announcing plans to construct 107,500 tons of warships this year.

Keels which Germany will lay down this year will bring her navy to a 35 per cent ratio with Britain's, the full strength provided by the Anglo-German agreement.

The agreement, which strained Franco-British relations, was negotiated only last month, indicating German plans for new naval tonnage have been long in preparation.

Tonnages Listed.

The new tonnage will consist of two armored ships of 26,000 tons each with 28 centimeter (11.0236 inches) guns, two 10,000-ton cruisers with 20 centimeter (7.874 inches) guns, 16 destroyers of 1,625 tons each with 12.7 centimeter (4.99 inches) guns and auxiliary vessels.

An official announcement reveals some of the tonnage already has been laid down. The remaining keels will be laid before the end of the year.

Twenty Submarines.

Recalling Germany's development of submarine warfare 20 years ago, the new naval construction program provides for 20 submarines of 250 tons each. The first submarine, the announcement revealed, went into service June 1. Two others were launched June 29.

Germany was forbidden submarines by the Versailles Treaty.

In addition to the smaller undersea craft Germany will build six submarines of 500 tons each and two of 750 tons.

Plans for airplane carriers and other fleet units which the Nazi government plans to lay down will be published in 1936 or 1937.

Construction of several of the destroyers, it was revealed, began as long ago as last year before any sanction had been given to Germany's re-emergence as a naval power.

U. S.-Swedish Trade Treaty Is Proclaimed

By the Associated Press.

The Swedish-American reciprocal trade agreement—fourth of such pacts concluded under the Administration's trade policy—yesterday was proclaimed effective August 5 by President Roosevelt.

Similar agreements with Cuba, Belgium and Haiti already are operative. A pact with Brazil now is before the Brazilian Congress for approval.

The chief concession granted Sweden is the pledge to maintain Swedish wood pulp on the free list.

Wood pulp constitutes two-thirds of American imports from that country.

Concessions Retained.

The agreement, however, reserves action on mechanical wood pulp and bleached sulphite pulp, which are furnished chiefly by Canada, and retains concessions on them as a trading lever to be utilized in the forthcoming Canadian - American trade agreement negotiation.

A duty reduction from 20 to 17½ cents per gross boxes on matches with uncolored stems in small boxes has stirred opposition from the American match industry.

The United States will permit the free importation of bleached and unbleached sulphate wood pulp and Swedish health bread, and will reduce the duty on sponge iron, muck bars, alloy steels, unfinished structural steel, round wire, wrapping paper, paper board and strike on box matches.

Duties to Be Slashed.

In return reduced duties in Sweden will become effective on American automobile tires, cereal breakfast foods, baking powder, pineapple preserves, canned fruits of various kinds, canned soup, canned pork and beans, tooth powder and paste, and shaving cream and paste.

Institute Gives New Deal Foe Cool Reception

corporations was assailed as "unsound," while his social security program was defended as both necessary and equitable.

But the meatiest discussion was that which took place over "The New Deal and the Constitution."

Why the New Deal is so pointedly ignoring this round table at which it has been invited to have a seat and spokesman at every session has caused speculation here. Literally dozens from the New Deal ranks have been asked to speak, but all, except a few, have declined on the plea that their duties in Washington or elsewhere will not permit them to come. Others have accepted, only later to excuse themselves or ask that they be switched to another program.

Only late today did the director of the institute learn that the "Constitution and New Deal" discussion would be without an Administration spokesman tomorrow. Senator Rush D. Holt had agreed to appear at that time, but late today he telephoned that a committee meeting would prevent his coming, and asked that he be switched to Wednesday. Representative David J. Lewis, of Maryland, was the New Deal speaker originally scheduled for today, but he also had his engagement switched to later in the week.

Authorities Appear Puzzled.

In view of these things, along with withdrawal of Internal Revenue Commisisoner Guy T. Helvering and Raymond Moley from the institute program after they had accepted, the authorities here have wondered whether they are being boycotted or whether the Administration has decided to give the silent treatment to anything with which the American Liberty League is associated.

Their perplexity is the greater because the "Constitution and New Deal" round table was established to provide a forum for an issue which President Roosevelt projected and apparently wanted discussed. Still, as the work goes along it is believed the New Deal viewpoint will be adequately if not forcefully expressed.

Reviewing the New Deal from its inception, pointing out the indecision which marked some policies and the conflicts between the Democratic platform and President Roosevelt's utterances, Nicholas Roosevelt conceded that many of the social objectives of the New Deal had long been needed and that economic conditions are now no better than on March 4, 1933.

He contended, however, that recovery "in America has been slower than in countries untroubled by so many social and economic experiments," pointing out that, according to League of Nations statistics, the United States last winter in point of recovery of industrial output ranked sixteenth out of 18 leading nations.

Of importance, Roosevelt found, was the establishment of a new philosophy in American life, one of centralization based on "the assumption that it is not only the right but the duty of the central government to exercise powers over the whole industrial, financial and agricultural life of the country."

Speaker Specifies Issue.

"The issue," he asserted, "is plain. The American system of checks and balances versus the European system of a strongly centralized, all-powerful executive. It is not only the issue of the Federal Government against the States, but of the President against Congress and the Supreme Court. Are we to substitute autocracy for democracy?"

Citing details to substantiate his contention that the executive branch of the Government has usurped the legislative functions and was using its powers to exact obedience from business and industry, Roosevelt contended that after the Supreme Court Schechter decision the President "even went so far as to imply that he would welcome a campaign based on a fight, by him, against States rights."

"When this proposition met with widespread criticism, he hastily beat a retreat," the speaker added.

Roosevelt conceded the sincere belief of New Dealers that they were doing the best for the country, but what they are trying to establish, he added, "is a form of Twentieth Century paternalism," which means "substituting an economic dictatorship for a political democracy." He contended that the problem of governing and regimenting this Nation was too great to be centralized in Washington and asked whether "the ideal of economic security is more compelling than that of personal liberty."

His audience apparently preferred the ideal of economic security because out of half a dozen or more who arose to speak or ask questions only one, H. H. Royall, a nearby Virginia farmer, joined in his criticism of the New Deal.

Dr. Wythe Leigh Kinsolving warmly defended the New Deal in its effort to ameliorate hunger and suffering, holding that the Constitution should not and did not stand in the way of such action. John Daniels, of New York, former secretary of the English Speaking Union, asked what proof there was that more and bigger centralization of government in Washington would not add to efficiency and human contentment.

Harold S. Buttenheim, editor of the magazine American City, in a question indicated his opinion that economic regimentation had become necessary for the Nation to cope with the problems confronting it. Mrs. Frank H. Funk, wife of a former Republican Congressman from Illinois, applauded the New Deal crop control program, saying that when the Democrats showed such enlightenment she was for them. The Rev. Evans A. Worthley, of Iowa City, also praised the AAA objectives and asserted that the idea that they were being subjected to a dictatorship had never occurred to his farming neighbors.

Putnam, in his factual recitation of the now dead NRA, contended that "when the New Deal runs counter to the Constitution, the New Deal, of course, gives way." He concluded with the hope that the NRA would prove of value by showing what can be done at some future time.

Noel Sargent, secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers, assailed the proposed graduated corporation tax. He contended that "there has been too much discussion of budget balancing by inflation and additional taxation, too little discussion of budget balancing by Government economy."

Corporation Tax Assailed.

Singling out the graduated corporation tax as a target, he contended that it was "as unsound in practice as it is plausible when first presented." He held it to be "discriminating" because "it confuses the income of the individual and the income of the corporation" since it does not follow stockholders in a large corporation having large incomes.

Australian Prime Minister Greeted by Hull

Underwood & Underwood.

The Prime Minister of Australia, J. E. Lyons, who arrived in Washington yesterday with his wife, is shown with the welcoming party at Union Station. Left to right are Sir Ronald Lindsay, British Ambassador; the Prime Minister, Secretary of State Cordell Hull, Mrs. Lyons and Mrs. Hull.

Premier Lyons Of Australia At White House

He and Wife Honored at Reception; Talks With President on Trade.

With a wave of the hand and the smile of an astute politician, Joseph Aloysius Lyons, Premier of Australia, and his plump wife stepped from a New York train yesterday and were whisked off to the White House last night for a friendly chat with President Roosevelt about conditions "down under."

Here to find markets for Australian goods, from kangaroos to beef and wool, the premier came to the United States from London, where he attended the Empire's royal jubilee and rode in state behind the King. He evaded those who would question him, inviting them to the British Embassy for a press conference this morning. A car from the White House awaited him at the station and in it he and his wife and his luggage left the station.

At the White House last night he was guest of honor at a reception and had a long talk with Mr. Roosevelt about matters mostly pertaining to trade. In New York the day before he had told reporters, as he stepped from the liner Rex, that he and the President were to discuss matters of "mutual interest." But, he added, "I am not empowered to make trade treaties."

Of average height, but slightly rotund, "Joe" Lyons, as he is called "down under," limps slightly. He was injured in a train accident several years ago. An unruly shock of steel gray hair is his most prominent feature. His features are sharply cut. He looks what he is—the smartest politician among the Anzecs.

He smiles readily, but when he first stepped from the train his face was serious. When he saw the ubiquitous cameramen, however, he readily assumed the smiling countenance which has helped bring him to the top as a member of Australia's Federal Labor Party, the party credited with rescuing Australia from the depression.

Accompanying him, besides Mrs. Lyons, was E. M. Dow, Australian secretary in New York; Clark L. Willard, of the State Department, and J. P. Moffatt, newly appointed consul general at Sydney.

Mrs. Lyons was bristling with excitement. In New York she had told reporters she looked forward to meeting Mrs. Roosevelt.

W. A. Seddinger of Norfolk Expected to Head Virginia Department.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The opening session of the twenty-seventh annual convention of the Department of Virginia, United Spanish War Veterans, was held yesterday in the auditorium of the Elks Home. Addresses by representatives of veterans' and civic organizations occupied the morning, and at noon a short business session was held, when reports were received and nominations made for officers who will be elected today. The indications are that William A. Seddinger, of Norfolk, will be elected commander.

The next convention city will be chosen today, just before final adjournment, with Lynchburg and Charlottesville bidding for the meeting. After the afternoon recess the delegates went to Washington to attend the sesison of Congress.

Commander Charles B. Emmons of the Maj. James E. King Camp, Alexandria, presided and introduced the speakers.

Mayor E. C. Davison brought the official greetings of the city, and urged the veterans to unite to combat the insidious forces which are operating against the Government.

Youngest Camp.

Department Commander George W. Cummings, of Richmond, expressed the thanks of the department for the hearty welcome extended by Alexandria, and added that it was through the efforts of Comrades Cochran, King and Emmons that Alexandria was chosen for this convention, this being the youngest camp in the State.

Mrs. Agnes V. Rooney, Norfolk, department president of the auxiliary, gave a brief talk on behalf of her organization.

Dan S. Hollenga, business manager of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce, spoke of the soap box orators who attempt to manage the affairs of the Nation, and said they should be compelled to go to Mount Vernon and bow their heads at the tomb of the Father of His Country and reflect on his teachings, after which, he said, they would disappear like snow on a red-hot shovel.

Maj. Dean Hudnutt, United States Army, brought greetings from the Army, and urged the veterans to renewed Americanism.

Arthur G. Orme, national chief of staff of the Spanish War Veterans, brought greetings from the national commander in chief, and complimented the veterans of Virginia on their advancement and sincerity of purpose. He briefly outlined the work of the national legislative committee in Washington and, as an instance of the heroism of the Spanish War forces, cited the sinking of the collier Merrimac in Santiago Harbor by Richmond Pearson Hobson for the purpose of bottling up the Spanish fleet, and the splendid work of Admiral Dewey's fleet at Manila Bay.

Legion Official Talks.

Department Commander Robert L. Inkso, of the American Legion, assured the veterans that the Department of Virginia is with them 100 per cent. He urged the return of patriotism and practice of humanity to be spread throughout the world.

Neville G. Hall, liaison officer of the American Red Cross with the Veterans' Administration, spoke of the work of his organization in the Spanish War, and of its progress since that time.

Miss Lucy M. Graves, president of the local auxiliary, who was secretary to Miss Clara Barton, head of the Red Cross in the Spanish-American War, spoke of the work done in the war and of being on board the Texas when that ship entered the harbor of Santiago while it was full of mines, and of the work of the Red Cross nurses in caring for wounded soldiers. She said that the Texas carried, in addition to medical supplies, 1,800 tons of foodstuffs for the starving Cubans.

Maj. James Sipolski, of Lexington, department commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, urged the veterans to support in the elections those men who supported veterans' legislation, and brought greetings from his organization.

Mrs. John W. Travers, on behalf of the Alexandria auxiliary, presented a wreath in memory of the late Beg. Edgar Warfield, the last of the 700 Confederate soldiers who left Alexandria to join their commands on May 24, 1861. In the afternoon the auxiliary went to Arlington National Cemetery and placed this wreath beside the mast of the Maine.

A canning school will open tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in the domestic science class room of the Alexandria High School, sponsored by the subsistence garden program of the FERA. The latet methods of canning will be demonstrated and drying of vegetables will be demonstrated.

A similar class will open at 2 p. m., in the Perker-Gray school for colored people. Although the demonstration is given primarily for the subsistence gardens group, it is open to the public and additional information may be obtained from Mrs. Leroy E. Peabody.

John U. Reardon, president of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce stated yesterday the annual outing of that body will be on July 30 with a dinner at Fort Washington. The picnic supper will be held at 5 o'clock that afternoon in the natural amphitheater at the fort.

Here's One Woman Who Knew How To Reduce

You can reduce safely if you don't listen to gossipers and do as Mrs. Christensen did.

If you have a will of your own and don't listen to gossipers who tell you there's no safe way to reduce—you can not only get rid of surplus fat but actually enjoy better health than you have for years—just take a half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a cup of hot water every morning—tastes fine with juice of half lemon added.

So safe is Kruschen you can take it day in and day out for years—thousands do just to keep gloriously physically fit. A jar lasts 4 weeks and costs but a trifle.

Mrs. Clara Christensen, of Belmar, N. Y., writes: "Am on my 5th jar of Kruschen and reduced from 164 to 129 lbs. It's a wonderful product—makes you feel better." Advt.

Virginia Woman Asks Return of Son's Body

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Big Stone Gap, Va., July 8.—Despite regulations which will delay return for 18 months, Mrs. Dona Parsons Graham wants the body of her eldest son, Lieut. Winton S. Graham, United States Army flier whose body was found in Panama Canal Zone waters Friday, returned to his home here for burial. Mrs. Graham was informed by the War Department that the body must be cremated or returned home only after 18 months in accordance with Government health regulations. She chose the latter.

Young Graham was a graduate of Big Stone Gap High School. He was appointed to West Point by former Representative George C. Peery, now Governor of Virginia.

Bay Rum Is Blamed As Tipsy Cases Rise

Bay rum, with lemon juice added, was blamed yesterday for the sharp increase in drunkenness arests made by Park Police.

"No, sir," commented Chief Patrick J. Carroll, fingering the June report, "it isn't due to the sale of legal liquor. A large part of the 139 cases last month"—there were only 89 arrests for intoxication in May—"was furnished by these bay rum drinkers who center in Judiciary Square, Union Square and the Smithsonian grounds."

An inexpensive bottle of the erstwhile shaving lotion, which contains about 50 per cent alcohol, is adequate to put two or three drinkers "under," said the Park Police head.

For the first time since the District went wet, drunkenness led all cases in a Park Police monthly report. Second highest in June was the charge of violating traffic regulations, the customary leader, which produced 124 arrests.

Bethesda Man Wins Baltimore Traffic Dispute

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, July 8.—Charles H. Kerwin, of Bethesda, Md., who insisted his car had never been in Baltimore and therefore couldn't have been tagged for a parking law violation, won his point in traffic court today.

Kerwin's case resulted in some minor fireworks last month, involving Mayor Howard W. Jackson and Magistrate William F. Laukaitis. Early in June, an assistant secretary in the mayor's office sought to have the parking charge against Kerwin dropped.

Magistrate Laukaitis, commenting pointedly about the "city hall," refused to drop the charge and ordered Kerwin to appear for a hearing.

Later Mayor Jackson issued a statement explaining he was not "trying to run the traffic court from the city hall, but that his secretary was merely trying to "seek a courtesy" for a "reputable citizen."

Today was set for the hearing, but Kerwin, who previously had asked an earlier hearing, sent in an affidavit in which he stated, under oath, his car had never been in Baltimore. Magistrate George Eckhardt, jr., decided Kerwin was right.

By the Associated Press.

Crisfield, Md., July 8.—Nearby Tangier Island, just across the Virginia line in the Chesapeake Bay, boasts an 81-year-old skipper who has sailed vessels since he was 7 years old, but who has never been to sea.

He is Capt. John W. Dize, fisherman and boat builder. Although his sight is failing, the sailing boat master recently finished a 100-mile voyage in a skipjack to Annapolis.

All of Capt. Dize's voyages have been on the Chesapeake Bay, and you can believe him that body of water can grow as violent as any ocean. During his countless trips over this inland sea he has had many narrow escapes.

738 Are Immunized Against Typhoid

Hagerstown Health Dept. Continues Fever Drive.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., July 8.—The health department today announced that 738 persons had been immunized in its drive to stamp out typhoid fever in Washington County.

The campaign was concentrated in eleven rural communities, where in recent years the disease has occurred each summer. The largest number immunized was in the Tonoloway orchard region in the Hancock district. No cases of typhoid fever have been reported in the county thus far in 1935.

A noticeable reduction in cases in the last four years is attributed by Dr. W. Ross Cameron, health officer, to improved milk and water supplies and installation of sewerage systems in the larger communities. In 1931 there were 97 cases of typhoid in the county, in 1932 there were 54, in 1933 40 cases and last year but 12 cases.

Felon Stabbed In Prison Fight With Murderer

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, July 8.—A fight between two prisoners in the Maryland Penitentiary left one in the prison hospital today with a stab wound near the heart.

Wilson Knotts, the injured convict, was a witness to the fatal stabbings sometime ago of Frankie Allers. The prisoner with whom he was fighting was John L. "Wiggles" Smith, serving a life term in connection with the slaying of William B. Norris during a pay roll holdup in 1932.

Prison officials said the knifing took place near a washroom in one of the prison shops as the men were leaving for their noon meal yesterday. Each prisoner, when questioned about the battle, blamed the other, it was said.

Physicians at the prison hospital said Knotts escaped more serious injury and perhaps death when the knife blade struck a rib and was deflected. Smith, who denied having the knife, suffered a black eye.

Man Beaten Up Sues Detectives Asking $25,000

Robert Doran, Musician, Alleges They Assaulted Him Without Cause.

Detective Sergeants Clyde N. Strange, Eugene D. Lambert and Joseph W. Shimon, former members of the "hoodlum squad" attached to detective headquarters, were named joint defendants in a $25,000 damage suit filed in the District Supreme Court yesterday by Robert A. Doran, 1518 Newton street northwest, who charged the trio with beating him severely February 2.

As a result of the beating, Doran charged, his nose has been permanently impaired and the sight of one eye has been harmed. He claimed the detectives beat him "for no reason."

Doran, a musician, said he went to an apartment in the 1700 block of Columbia road northwest and found the detectives there. He contended they kicked and beat him without provocation.

Because of the seriousness of his hurts, he claimed, he was forced to spend much time in the hospital and in his home before he was able to go about. George E. Edelin and Theodore D. Peyser, attorneys representing Doran, said no charges were preferred against Doran by the detectives after the alleged beating.

Truck Farmers Pin Last Hope On Corn Crops

Other Produce Has Failed to Bring Profits to Somerset County.

By the Associated Press.

Crisfield, Md., July 8.—Somerset County truck farmers, their hopes of a profitable season successively blasted by every crop since the spring strawberry harvest, looked today to their corn as the last means of recouping serious losses.

Farmers here assert it is unusual to have crops prove as generally discouraging as have those of this year. String beans brought the lowest prices in several seasons, and a number of truckmen plowed them under in preference to taking prices below the cost of growing them.

The current green wrapping tomatoes are selling for as low as 25 cents a basket, in some cases lower, after climbing to a first-day high of $1.25. The bottom dropped out of the tomato market on the second day of the season, growers said.

Early peas brought as low as 30 cents a bushel, potatoes are barely covering production costs and the $1 per bushel cucumber price is said to leave but a meager profit to the farmer.

The new wheat crop, now being threshed, is quoted at 75 cents per bushel for the best quality—a figure below the cost of production and next to the lowest price ever received in Somerset County.

Observers assert the lower Eastern Shore farmer can find his only satisfaction in the prospects held out for his corn crop, now nearing maturity and said to be a thrifty condition. Barring mishap, it is said, growers should recoup somewhat with the crop.

The President's Good Fortune.

All who wish the Administration well will be pleased by the proposed transfer of John Dickinson from the position of Assistant Secretary of Commerce to that of Assistant Attorney General in charge of the antitrust division. For the contemplated change is a perfect example of that location of the right man in the exacting job which is so fundamental to successful administration.

As Assistant Secretary of Commerce Mr. Dickinson has for two years been a tower of strength to the New Deal. But his training and background are as much in the legal as in the economic and governmental fields and the position for which Mr. Cummings wants him is preeminently one calling for this unusual combination of expert qualifications. The shift will be unfortunate for Secretary Roper. But his personal sacrifice will be the Administration's gain.

Disintegration of NRA has emphasized the great potential importance of the antitrust division of the Department of Justice. The Attorney General's realization of the new significance of this division is shown by his recommendation to the President that Mr. Dickinson should head it. Approval of Mr. Cummings' request at the White House may almost be regarded as a formality. For the views which Mr. Dickinson has in the past expressed on the control of monopolies, the preservation of fair competition and the encouragement of business cooperation are substantially those which the President himself used in his famous message to Congress requesting the national industrial recovery act.

The problem of furthering business cooperation while retaining antitrust controls in the public interest has become much more delicate and difficult with the collapse of the code system. Social progress in this field will now to a large extent depend on the depth of understanding and breadth of outlook shown by the Federal Trade Commission and the antitrust division of the Department of Justice. President Roosevelt's proverbial good luck is again attested by having already at hand, only needing transfer from another department, a man so eminently qualified for the vacancy in the Department of Justice as is John Dickinson.

For This Relief, Much Thanks.

It isn't a new story, but at least it really happened in suburban Long Island. For we saw the clipping from the local paper which announced that:

> In behalf of the unemployed, the women of our church have cast-off clothing of all descriptions. The display may be inspected in the church basement every evening.

And now these humanitarian, yet ultrasophisticated, New Yorkers are showing that in matters of sex they play no favorites. "For the benefit of the Legal Aid Revolving Fund," says a form letter which an admirer has sent to our cluttered desk:

> The Westchester County Women's Republican Club is sponsoring a performance of "The Naked Man," with Leonora Ulrich in the title role . . . Let us do all we can to help this worthy cause.

The captious may assert that Miss Ulrich is in danger of overtaxing even her remarkable histronic talents. All but the hypercritical, however, will feel undisguised admiration at the forthright way in which the metropolis shapes up to the problem of the underprivileged.

Heroes In North Carolina.

The epidemic of infantile paralysis now sweeping the east central section of North Carolina is fortunately mild, both as to number of cases and severity of the attacks. But regardless of intensity, the fact that 200 or more persons have been struck down by the disease, with more likely to succumb before cool weather brings an end to the scourge, is a matter of serious concern to the entire country. Once the polio germ has struck, it can and will strike again in other places. Thus it is far more than a local concern to hasten the control and eventual eradication of the blighting paralysis.

Toward this end, the people of the afflicted area are cooperating in heroic manner. A vaccine has been produced in the hope of immunising children from the disease, but it has never yet been fairly tested. Although it has been used occasionally before, circumstances have not permitted accurate experiments. For these it is necessary to have a control group, that is, a group exactly comparable to all others in a community except that it does not receive vaccine injections.

In North Carolina just such a group is available. Public health officials have been authorized a free hand to select with absolute impartiality certain children to receive the vaccine and certain others not to receive it. As will be readily appreciated by every parent, it demands real courage and a high sense of citizenship to support this searching test.

Whether the injections will prove of any use is highly questionable. But even if they are valueless, a people willing to submit their children as human guinea pigs, in the hope that other children may thus be protected, richly deserve the gratitude and admiration of all mankind.

Salutary Tax Truths.

Launched with an evident desire to propitiate radical groups clamoring for heavier impositions upon the wealthy, the President's tax message has proved a political boomerang. It is focusing public attention on the problems presented by an unbalanced budget and affording temperate critics, like Senator Vandenberg, an admirable opportunity for emphasizing various salutary truths the public has been disposed to ignore or forget.

"The Federal Treasury is racing merrily toward potential insolvency," the Senator points out in a radio address, adorned with concrete facts and figures to support his timely warning. He noted that the Government has spent over $14,000,000,000 in two years, while it has received less than $7,000,000,000 in revenue. The very magnitude of this "spending spree" which still continues "at breakneck speed," makes it difficult for the average man to grasp its enormity. It is more comprehensibiliy expressed in terms of expenditures per minute, which it is computed, have averaged $13,812 during the past year.

Obviously governments, like individuals, can not live year after year on a scale far in excess of income. A day of reckoning always comes. Our Government, like others before it, will eventually discover that it must either return to a policy of "pay as you go" or invite ruinous inflation. Senator Vandenberg has performed a timely service in emphasizing the inexorability of the choice that lies ahead of us. Mere prating about the theoretical desirability of budgetary balance will not save us. Nor will a few millions, collected from the very rich, provide a solution of our fiscal problems. That is made evident by the negligible returns which Secretary Morgenthau yesterday estimated would be obtained from suggested tax increases on big incomes and corporations. Returns from inheritance taxes of course vary widely from year to year. If the tax rates are confiscatory, moreover, they result in dissipation of property and future loss of revenue.

Economy plus heavily increased taxes upon millions of our citizens is, as Senator Vandenberg affirms, essential if we are to restore sound fiscal conditions. "Of course the rich must pay," he concludes, "—and pay up to the hilt. But let us not delude ourselves. The income tax base must be broadened and all the brackets must accept a heavier load."

As a matter of fact, we shall probably be forced to turn to sources of revenue not reached by direct income taxation—such as taxes on gross returns from sales and various indirect levies that take toll from the consuming masses. Certainly the scope of our spending program will have to be greatly curtailed if we expect to avoid such impositions. The sooner it is realized that a few rich people can not be relied upon to carry the cost of government, the easier it will be to obtain support for a genuine economy program.

Senator Vandenberg has outlined the course that the Administration must follow if the country is to be saved from bankruptcy. A comprehensive tax program suited to our needs and capable of producing adequate revenues calls for much more time than can be devoted to the subject at this session. If Congress limits its new tax levies to those recommended by the President, it will have to expand its program at no distant date.

Under the circumstances the chief benefit gained by the present action comes from the light thrown upon the gravity of our tax problems by those who realize how half-baked and inadequate are the proposals now under consideration.

The Court Of Appeals.

Unusual importance attaches to the selection of a successor to the late Justice Hitz because of the many vital issues that will be determined in the courts (especially the tribunals of the Capital City) within the next few years. The Court of Appeals is only one step removed from the Supreme Court. Its influence upon the final decision of intricate constitutional questions is undoubtedly substantial. Moreover, this tribunal may properly be regarded as a stepping stone by which the most capable jurists may hope to demonstrate qualification for the Nation's highest judicial office.

No further comment should be necessary to emphasize the desirability of selecting a highly trained jurist whose integrity, industry and technical knowledge are not open to question. Numerous candidates are said to be seeking the honor of succeeding Justice Hitz. The customary political pressure will be applied in behalf of some. Others will prefer to rely upon their judicial training and experience for recommendation. As a matter of basic principle only the latter should be considered.

"Justice," said Addison, "discards party, friendship, kindred, and is therefore always represented as blind." The veiled irony of his remark endures in spite of improvement in judicial systems. Certainly justice is still recognized as short-sighted when it fails to discard party, friendship and kindred. As a whole our courts show an admirable degree of detachment from outside influences. And every statesman realizes the necessity of preserving that objective and judicial viewpoint on the bench if democracy is to endure.

In filling the vacancy on the Court of Appeals it may be assumed, as a matter of course, that the Department of Justice will check the judicial qualifications of every candidate considered. No doubt the desirability of promoting jurists now serving on the District supreme bench will be given special recognition—above all, the people of the District have the right to expect that only experienced men, outside of active politics, and of unquestioned judicial temperament, will be considered.

The American Radical.

At long last something has been done to organize a third national party and to disperse a din of fulsome talk. Men of the type described by the Unofficial Observer as "indispensable irritants," in that they supply the motive power for change and counterbalance the inertia of conservatism, have met in Chicago to develop a concrete political orientation "based on the principle of production for use."

It is significant from standpoint of practical politics, that five congressmen called the conference and, further, that no Communists were invited. Of the congressmen, two are Wisconsin Progressives; one a Minnesota Farmer-Laborite, one a California Democrat hailing from Long Beach, the home of Dr. Townsend; and one a New York City Republican who is commonly regarded as the heir apparent to LaGuardia's liberalism. It is at least equally significant that the last-named, Representative Marcantonio, has already withdrawn from the movement because of certain fundamental disagreements with its slant.

For temporary chairman the assembly chose a professor of political economy, Paul Douglas, of the University of Chicago, a forceful leader well seasoned by his studies in the fields of unemployment and labor relations. To others will fall the task of organizing a popular mandate for the realization of a day of profitless and planned production. Already words of encouragement have come from Gov. Olson of Minnesota and—though with slightly less enthusiasm—from Upton Sinclair, of California. Undoubtedly a considerable response will be obtained by "The American Commonwealth Political Federation." But the translation of response into effective political cooperation will be the difficult part.

The national secretary, Alfred Bingham, son of the former Senator from Connecticut, has characterized the charter delegates as "radicals of a typical American strain." And there's the rub. The typical European radical has at least learned something of the technique of compromise. In France, for instance, even Communists and Socialists are able to work together, while any left-wing cabinet includes all manner of party spokesmen capable of co-operating for certain common ends.

The typical American radical, however, is best noted for the rugged individualism which he pretends to despise. The identifying characteristic of the John Browns, the Henry Georges, the Terrence Powderleys and the William Z. Fosters of America has been their arrogant disdain for compromise. A similar strain is evident today in those who feel that no hope of redemption remains in either old party. They can agree in criticism, but not in construction. There they are as far separated as the poles and twice as cool towards one another.

More Precious Than Gold.

There is a great deal that is remarkable about John D. Rockefeller, who attained his ninety-sixth birthday yesterday. There is something intriguing about any fortune that mounts up into millions of dollars. But when it has been amassed by one of Mr. Rockefeller's unique personality, coupled with the fact that he passed man's allotted three score and ten more than a quarter of a century ago, it has an added glamour.

Mr. Rockefeller golfs. Mr. Rockefeller sings. Mr. Rockefeller disperses dimes to small boys and hundreds of millions to foundations which have benefited humanity in innumerable ways! And the world looks on admiringly at a man who has so successfully kept death and senility at bay. Mr. Rockefeller reads. Mr. Rockefeller strolls. Mr. Rockefeller lives quietly! And the world looks on respectfully at a man whose temperance and moderation in all things still enable him to enjoy the little simplicities of life.

But there is one thing which Mr. Rockefeller possesses that is perhaps more dear to him than all his millions or all his memories. And that is the 19 original teeth which he still retains intact. One wonders what Mr. Rockefeller thought of his dentist's recent decision that "no drilling is necessary." The words must have smote sardonically on the ears of an old oil magnate. Mr. Rockefeller, nonagenarian, chews with his own teeth! And an admiring and respectful world looks on enviously.

Gen. Johnson, taking charge of work-relief in New York, said that "no miracles can be promised." What kind of un-American talk is this?—Boston Transcript.

The Church And Ethiopia.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post's cartoon on Mussolini writing with one hand his purpose to "civilize Abyssinia" and writing with the other hand his O. K. to the plan to burn the feet of the Abyssinians was the hit of the season in that sort of work.

May I, in perfectly good spirit follow up this crusade against the Italian dictator, who has done so many good things for his country, but who is now spilling all the milk produced by saying: "Since the church that is urging us to interfere to stop religious persecution in Mexico is the dominant one in Italy and since the head of that church has made a concordat with Mussolini, how can it be silent in the face of the present situation in Abyssinia?"

Nothing that Germany was even charged with doing to Belgium can outclass the proposed rape of Abyssinia by the Italian dictator. Yet with bombs from the air and with a new-fangled process of burning the feet of the ill-shod Abyssinians, the man of Christian background proposes to bring the black people of a peaceful and unoffending country to "civilization" and, incidentally, to an anti-slavery attitude!

In the name of reason, civilization and religion is the church to be quiet while all this is being done?

J. O. KNOTT.

A. F. Of L. Duty.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Each passing week indicates that more and more strikers are being mistreated and injured simply because they have taken steps to demonstrate their objections to starvation wages, lengthy hours, and lack of union recognition.

In the midst of all this bloodshed and depression practiced by the National Guard in many instances, we would expect the leader of the American Federation of Labor to shout his protest against such terror and viciousness. Do we hear from Green on this subject? No! Instead, we read of his drive against the Communists in the A. F. of L. unions.

The Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, the Daughters of the American Revolution are all doing plenty along this line—this is their province. The express duty of the president of the A. F. of L. is to protect the right of labor to strike and picket to better their conditions. Let others worry about the Reds.

JAMES FOLEY.

Janssen Next.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I quote from a recent issue of the Literary Digest:

"Three conductors whose names are lost to the Philharmonic Symphony, certainly for next season, are the impetuous young American, Werner Janssen; the veteran Bruno Walter, and Arthur Rodzinski. The departure of Janssen renews a bitter feud.

"Janssen, scarcely a boy, went to Europe and dazed musicians there. His command of the baton, his eloquent feeling for music, his cordial relationship with hardened symphony musicians battered away an ancient credo that Americans did not know how to conduct.

"He returned to America in triumph, only to stumble over difficulties laid before him by other conductors and by the stalwart refusal of Americans to believe (ancient complaint) that an American, doubly a young American, had conducting talent."

Should not we Americans do something about this?

Wants "Old Reliables."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I noticed a statement which appeared in a local paper on the 3d instant about the street car which showed that they are still being used in other cities in the country. Of course the statement goes on to show that new buses are being purchased, too. The only reason they are, as I see it, is to cut down the expenses, because it only takes one to operate a bus. The comfort of the passengers is not taken into consideration at all, as I cannot see the bus at all in transporting thousands, but as long as they ride them the companies will operate them. But don't let the transit company buy all buses; just remember that thousands here in the city want to ride in the "Old Reliable" street car, and see that they purchase plenty of new ones, especially like those on the Rosslyn and Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast line, as they are lots better to ride in.

They Died In Vain.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Avoid Foreign Entanglements!" This much-quoted advice should be the watchword of Americans today, not because Washington said it, but simply because it is sensible and worthy advice.

Mussolini is about to take all, or a part of Ethiopia, and the latter asks that we mix into the strife—as a middleman, to be sure, but we would be obliged to take a definite stand which might be the direct cause of our entering into the struggle. We have nothing to gain by any more European wars, and the late disagreement in which we joined, to "make the world safe for democracy," is enough proof that Americans were expensively, ridiculously and thoroughly stung. It was a noble cause, perhaps, but those men who died, are still dead, and people still mourn them. American finance has never recovered from the plunge. We shall never know how many "mute, inglorious Miltons" are now corpses in a soldier's grave. Surely, of all the men who died, a large percentage of them could now be something more than dead heroes!

We have about concluded that American people were the butts for the exploitation of big business in that war, and that those who lie in Flanders Field did die in vain. I believe that such a thing might happen again, for we are a people who love our patriotism, and anything that we are told is in defense or our honor (more often it proves to be somebody's money) is the cause for a wave of hatred and war-mindedness.

Let us not deceive ourselves into believing that we are obliged to "protect" anyone. We shall have plenty to do if we protect ourselves against our own propaganda and our own foolishness without setting up ourselves as a big brother to any nation.

P. R. McCRAY.

Terrifying Quiet.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I ask to what can we attribute the sudden cessation of activities and advice in the hitherto busiest unit of the New Deal? Or is it one of those blessed interludes to which Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, father of the late Supreme Court Justice, once alluded when he wrote:

> And silence like a poultice > came to heal the wounds of sound.

To heal the wounds of sound.

The 1935 Model Onion.

From the Pittsburg Press.

An odorless onion is reported almost ready to be presented to a public that has impatiently (though not breathlessly) looked forward to an expurgated edition of this vegetable. But there's a catch. The new onion, say its sponsors, is so thoroughly remodeled that it doesn't even taste like an onion.

Nonsense! They might as well remove the odor of limburger by making that pungent victual taste like butter. We'll stick to horse-and-buggy days for our onions, even though our best friends tell us to go away.

Lotteries Vs. Mining Stock

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with mingled interest and amusement R. J. F.'s letter in favor of Kenney's lottery. It seems to me that lottery legislation would be a most fitting capsheaf for all Federal legislative foolishness of the New Deal.

The lottery would certainly be a fine window dressing for and give a decided comparative respectability to all this foolishness of spending ourselves out of debt, of destroying ourselves out of poverty, regimenting ourselves out of individualism, and trying to make something out of nothing.

If I ever seemed to learn anything, even in the public schools, it was that life is a struggle for existence, and if I carried away any real Christian principle from the Sunday school, it was that you can not beat the game and steal your bread, as a rule, but must earn it—must work for it and get it "in the sweat of your face."

It is not surprising that R. J. F. finds it more difficult to buy food and clothing, as the crude destruction and free "distribution" foolishness of "New Dealism" progresses, just as R. J. F. and every other tribute payer who is not a greater tribute taker of the "New Deal" will find it still more difficult to buy food and clothing with the mounting price-rise if part of his income is spent on betting.

Anyway, fake mining stock certificates are more picturesque, more appropriate and would go much farther in papering a room in one's house.

European Causerie

By Andre Vullict.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

THE chief topic of conversations in Paris recently has been—and, no doubt, will remain for some time—the Anglo-German naval accord just reached in London. The signature, after exclusively bilateral negotiations, of an agreement giving Germany a right to build 35 brand-new warships for each 100 ships, old or new, in the British navy, came somewhat as a cold shower to the French.

With a keen sense for immediately detecting what may jeopardize their security, French official circles point out that the 425,000-ton navy granted the Reich by Great Britain will put German yards on a full schedule for the next three or four years, as their yearly output capacity is about 80,000 to 100,000 tons. Whether their building will be for peaceful or bellicose purposes is a cause of heated debate in Paris, but pessimists do not like the idea of seeing it receive Great Britain's official blessing.

Inasmuch as the next three or four years are regarded by most observers as vital in the matter of peace or war, the French look with concern upon anything that seems to let Germany's military expansion go unchecked. It is always the same old question of whether Germany's ultimate aims may be trusted or not.

Moreover, the French are worried to see how rapidly the Versailles Treaty, with which they had hoped to freeze Germany into her post-war position, seems to be melting in the sun.

* * * *

Its financial clauses were abolished in July, 1932, at Lausanne, when reparation payments were brought to a stop. Its military provisions are now a thing of the past, as Germany's rearmament and military equipment seem to be progressing unfettered. Nothing is left of the famous treaty except its territorial clauses. But nobody thinks that these will ever be revised without a war.

The reason why France and Great Britain seem to feel so differently about it is that the British, whatever their apparent devotion to the League of Nations and collective peace, inwardly believe in the possibility of dividing the problem into many a smaller issue, in solving each according to the moment's necessity and in feeling safe if peace on the Rhineland (their frontier, according to Premier Baldwin, is insured.

The French think differently. Their bent of mind is too theoretical, too permeated with the idea of absolute security, to be satisfied with such simple solutions. Their conception of peace is an architectural one, embracing all Europe in a sort of permanent framework. Their sensitiveness to the German peril is such that they fear the slightest change in any European border line might eventually endanger their own frontiers.

In more ways than one, the political sensitivenesss of Paris toward European problems is similar to the economic sensitiveness of London as regards the world. Let a new factory be built in China, a new shipping line be operated in South America, new troubles start in South Africa, and the "City" is all in a flurry.

In fact, it appears that the inner preoccupations of the French and the British peoples are fundamentally different. This may be the reason why, except in rare cases when the same interest brings them together (and the World War was one), they can not stick together long enough to achieve common results.

* * * *

You may find thousands of examples to prove that most economists or so-called great men go wide of the mark in their predictions. M. Thiers, the great French politician who pulled his country out of the mire after the 1870 war, never believed that railroads would ever be more than an amusing pastime. He was encouraged in his mistake by Arago, another great Frenchman, who thought that "the transportation of troops by railroad would effeminate them" and that a 200-yard-long tunnel would "cause the travelers to catch colds, cough and spit."

Similarly, not more than a few years ago, no economist on earth would have seriously believed that pocket-sized Portugal, at the tip end of Europe, long known for its artistic beauties, its periodical revolutions and its shaky public finances would become a model of orthodox economy and financial integrity.

Well, in 1930, the Portuguese government's budget showed a slight surplus for the first time, which experts listlessly regarded as a happy accident in Portugal's history. Despite depression, the same accident has happened regularly since and those brilliant economists who survived their skepticism are now rushing from France, Great Britain and the United States down to the little country to see how it's done. And there [illegible] staring in amazement, but technically, there is nothing to learn.

M. de Salazar, himself, the Portuguese finance minister and virtual dictator of his country, who is responsible for the miracle, thus explains his recipe: "A careful computation of receipts and the determination not to spend a cent over what has been itemized in advance, unless such expenditure is made up for by additional receipts or a decrease in other expenditures."

That's all. But it implies a strong moral doctrine. Portugal has "done" what other countries have been "talking of" for years.

For The Relief Of Joe And John.

IT is strange that nobody has pointed it out before but there is a marked resemblance in the careers for the past two years of Senator Bankhead and Mr. Roosevelt. That is to say, they have both solved problems and were finally checked by the orderly process of government. Like as not the Senator, running up against this stop just as Mr. Roosevelt did in the NRA decision, thinks there should be a change in the Government or something. It wouldn't occur, of course, to a man going so fast as the Senator was going that he himself ought to change. The thing that should be changed is what is in his way.

While it was the Supreme Court that halted Mr. Roosevelt and brought him to the realization that there had to be a change, in the Senator's case it is the House. Although he has not said anything of the kind it wouldn't be surprising at all if he is an enthusiastic supporter of Senator Norris' plan for a unicameral Congress. If it were not for the House the Senator would still be solving the problems of the South. As it is, there are many who say, rightly or wrongly, that next year his constitutents will settle the problem for him. This may not be so. Lots of times there are persons unfriendly enough to predict hard sledding for a Senator the next time he comes up and when the time comes he doesn't have hard sledding at all.

• • • •

It is a fact, though, that the Senator's mind would be much easier these days if the House had just let him go ahead and solve the South's problems in his blundering way. He undoubtedly considers that the House should not have let him solve the first problem if it did not intend to let him solve the problems which solution of this first problem entailed. To do as it has done is to leave the Senator out on a limb, or in between problems, so to speak.

It was the Senator's idea, it will be recalled, of regimenting the cotton farmers and paying them a processing tax. It got very unpopular after it had been in operation a few months and fellow Senators were calling it the Cottonhead bill instead of Bankhead bill, by which term it had been formerly known. The Administration rather than lose the hold over the farmers which the bill had given them, decided to release the small growers from its provisions. In this way favor has been returned to the measure for a while.

It developed early, though, that the bill had worked a hardship on the share croppers and tenant farmers in that when the farm owner curtailed his production he kicked the share croppers and tenant farmer out into the cold. This gave the Senator considerable pause, not only him, but Senator Joe Robinson, who also comes up for reelection next year.

• • • •

Bankhead was equal to the occasion, however. If his first bill to relieve a problem had itself created a problem the thing to do was to remove the second problem. The impression is that he was prepared to go right on down the line relieving problems that developed in the wake of his solutions. Thus he got up a second Bankhead bill to relieve the tenant farmers and the share-croppers. This measure in a few years would provide $1,000,000,000 with which the Government could buy up the land of the land-poor barons of the South and in turn sell it to share-croppers and tenant-farmers at nominal interest rates and give them 60 years in which to pay the principal.

With such a measure as this hardly anybody in the South could have any ill feeling against Bankhead, or Joe, either. The land-poor barons would be enriched as they haven't been since the Cevil War and the tenants and share-croppers would have farms for which they would probably never pay. The share-cropper problem is very serious in Joe's State and he worked up as much enthusiasm for the bill as Bankhead himself. With Joe's assistance it was shoved through the Senate.

The House, however, will have none of it. Significantly, it is not on the President's "must" list, yet to Joe and Bankhead it is the mustiest bill there is.

Their friends are saying it is just another example of the President's neglect of Democrats. Look what he gives the Progressives, they wail, and he won't give the Democrats a thing. Only the other day Representative Martin Kennedy, Tammanyite, said the whole country was concerned because Mr. Roosevelt held onto Republican office-holders in New York. In the minds of Joe and John, very likely, the country is concerned about their bill.

Land Im Osten

Hitler's Plan For Territorial Gains In East Accounts For Entente With England And Explains His Coolness Toward League Which Guarantees Russia's Integrity.

By Stephane Botchev,
Special Correspondence of The Post
Geneva (By Mail)

THE events of the past few weeks—the Anglo-German naval accord, the renewal of German overtures to France, the bettering of Italo-German relations—must be considered with the great aim of the Third Reich's foreign policy in mind, if one is to understand their real meaning. This aim is the acquisition of territory to the East; the policy which tends toward it is the so-called Ostpolitik, explained by Hitler in his "Mein Kampf." This policy presupposes that Germany's rear to the West is secure, whence the necessity of accord with England, Italy and France, or at least with the first two of these countries. Recent events are all part of this policy of entente with the West in order to free Germany's hands in the East.

If one re-reads the two chapters in "Mein Kampf," chapters 13 and 14, which set forth the doctrine of Nazi foreign policy, one is struck by the harmony which exists between the aims and methods proposed there and the political acts of the Third Reich. It is now unquestionable that Hitler's policy is the policy which he set forth in his book. Hitler is applying his own doctrine. This doctrine was not taken quite seriously in the beginning. In general, in fact, Hitler's political plans were relegated to the domain of the fantastic dreams of illusionists. The march of events has shown that the whole German policy, even internally, has nevertheless been conditioned by the great aims of foreign policy which Hitler had set himself before he came into power.

For Hitler the goal of foreign policy is not the destruction of the Versailles system and the return to the former German frontiers of 1914. No. These were artificial frontiers, says Hitler; they were not the frontiers which Germany really needs, but frontiers resulting from particular historical circumstances, even from pure accident. What Germany must aim for now is the acquistion of her natural frontiers.

One can really say that Hitler's political doctrine has introduced the French doctrine of "natural frontiers" into German political ideology. Yet here the notion is dynamic. These natural frontiers result from the national-demographic needs of Germany. She must be able to dispose of sufficient land in Europe—which at present she does not have. This land, this earth—the Grund und Boden of which Hitler speaks—Germany can not find anywhere, but to the East. At the end of his expose of Nazi foreign policy, Hitler proclaims clearly that this must be the one end, the great aim, of German policy: the acquisition of territory in the east, Land im Osten.

THERE is no more severe critic of Germany's pre-war policy than Herr Hitler. This is for two reasons: in the first place, because Hitler is against a colonial policy, and secondly, because of its dispersion of effort. Hitler has one great principle to apply: the sovereignty of the goal. He owes to perseverance in his plans even his success in internal policy. One must know how to choose a goal, he says, and once one has chosen it, everything must be sacrificed to it. There must be no scattering of effort; once the aim is chosen, everything must be considered as a means to attaining it.

It is the application of this principle which one must see in the latest manifestations of German policy. The goal is the acquisition of the land to the East, Land im Osten. German hostility to Russia continues. But the settling of accounts with Russia which Hitler announces in his program presupposes an accord with Italy and England, and the elimination of France, either by crushing or by encircling her. It is Hitler who proclaims all this. And now he is acting in conformity with his program.

Kein Verzicht darf uns also unaussprechbar erscheinen no cession can be considered too great, says Hitler, when it is a question of realizing the conditions which will eventually allow this expansion to the East, which is his great aim, his dream. It is in this idea that one must look for the key to the latest manifestations of German policy; it is through this idea that their meaning becomes clear. Certainly the naval accord with England has great technical advantages for Germany as well, but the advantage which is the most appreciated in Germany is the political success of having laid the first stone in the building of the general Anglo-German entente without which no Eastern policy, no Ostpolitik is conceivable. And one must consider in the same light the moves toward rapprochement with Italy and France.

• • • •

IF, on the other hand, Hitler refuses to return to Geneva, it is all in the line of his policy. What attraction could he see in the League, which guarantees the territorial integrity of Russia, which guarantees the status quo by a system of collective security? German policy toward Russia, as it is sketched out in Nazi doctrine and as it is being prepared now in Hitler's acts, makes the return of Germany to Geneva highly improbable. For his is an aggressive policy.

Hitler's father, as he recounts himself in "Mein Kampf," wanted, petty workman though he was, to become an official. That was his goal; he kept it obstinately in his head, and in the end he succeeded; at the end of his life he had a respectable situation. The son, and he says so himself, proposes to give to Germany a respectable situation. He does not appear to be any less obstinate than his father. Will he succeed in his grand designs, as his father in a tiny field before him?

Longevity Of BritishSingers

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps.

THE famous Welsh tenor soloist, Ben Davies, and his wife, also a well-known singer, celebrated their golden wedding in London recently.

Now I well remember a performance of Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah," in New Haven, Conn., more than 40 years ago, when Ben Davies sang the tenor solos. He was even then famous in both hemispheres, and the beauty of his voice was equaled by the sincerity and intelligence of his art. I can see and hear him as plainly in memory at this moment as when I was in the auditorium in New Haven.

• • • •

There is an open album at Queens Hall, London, this week, and people from all over the world who have heard Ben Davies are inscribing their names.

He and his wife, Miss Clara Perry, belonged to the Carl Rosa Opera Company (remember that organization?) in 1885. He had been engaged by the director, Carl Rosa, because he had sung so magnificently in a students' performance of "Faust." He signed a contract for three years, $50 a week for the first year, $75 for the second, and $100 for the third.

He had made his first appearance in 1881 in "The Bohemian Girl," an opera that I think ought to be revived. I shall never forget Tom Karl and Macdonald and Geraldine Ulmar in that opera!

• • • •

One of the most famous tenor singers in English history was Sims Reeves. I heard him sing at a concert in England when he was so old that I do not dare to state his age, for fear I should be thought to draw on the imagination. His voice even then retained much of its beauty.

When I was bicycling through England in 1890, I attended a concert one night and a lady by the name of Belle Cole came forward on the stage. She was old and she was fat. I wondered where they got that curiosity until she began to sing. Her magnificent voice flooded the hall, and after half a dozen songs, she had to sing, "Home, Sweet Home," before the audience would let her depart.

One would think that the British climate was not favorable to the human voice, but John Wesley, who lived to be active as a public speaker at the age of 88, seemed to find it all right.

TVA Bill Starts Rough Journey To House Vote

Modified Measure, Disliked at White House, Meets Bi-Partisan Attack.

By the Associated Press.

Opposition charges that TVA sought "unreasonable" and unconstitutional powers yesterday started a compromise Tennessee Valley Authority bill on a thorny road toward a House vote.

Friends of President Roosevelt's power yardstick project predicted they could liberalize the measure which was brought to the floor in a form distasteful to the White House. Involved is a test of the President's power, particularly in view of the House overthrow of his wishes on the utility bill.

A drive to snip from the bill the sections opposed by the President brought an assertion of Representative Hill (Democrat), Alabama, that a "whispering campaign to defeat and destroy TVA" is in progress "throughout the Nation."

Alabaman Hints Veto.

While refraining from forecasting a Presidential veto, the Alabaman warned that unless amendments are penned into the measure in accordance with Administration desires, the House might as well "throw it in the waste basket."

Hill, ranking member of the military committee that framed the bill after weeks of intensive battling, was chosen by House friends of TVA to lead their effort for a more liberal measure.

To Fight Purchase Clause.

He said, moreover, that he would oppose as unconstitutional some of the provisions the Administration wants inserted in the bill, particularly one to give TVA the right to buy up private utility systems and sell them to communities desiring a public source of power.

Scarcely a friendly word for TVA was heard in the first few hours of debate. Republicans said even the restrictive compromise was too much, while a number of Democrats united in contending the TVA legislation desired by the Administration was too broad.

A group of liberals had yet to be heard, however. Their leaders met secretly during the day and decided to back amendments to restore to the compromise plan some of the features the Administration sought and to chop out others which it does not want.

Lobbying Not in Evidence.

But the corridor campaigning and subsurface lobbying that developed last week as the House fought over the utilities bill was not in evidence.

Representative Rankin (Democrat), Mississippi, critic of the so-called "power trust," did assert, though, that some members of the House Military Committee who had been opposing the Administration on TVA had met "power lobbyists" in their hotel "night after night." He declined to identify the committeemen.

Vote Expected Tomorrow.

Representative Plumley (Republican), Vermont, said the Authority already had usurped undelegated and unwarranted authority, and Representative McLean (Republican), New Jersey, contended that the TVA bill which swept through the Senate was designed to validate irregularities in TVA operations.

The compromise legislation was not expected to reach a final vote before tomorrow. First it must encounter attempts of Administration forces to delete sections that would forbid TVA construction of power lines which virtually would duplicate existing facilities, bar sales of power and fertilizer below production costs after January 1, 1937, and subject the Authority to strict financial auditing of the Comptroller General.

Morgenthau Presents Plans For Tax Up to $901,500,000

cratic committeemen to come to his aid.

Representative Thomas A. Jenkins (Republican), of Ohio, wanted to know what would be done with the revenue raised. The Treasury Secretary reiterated it was to be set aside "to enable us to borrow less."

"Then it is not to be used for paying off the public debt?" Jenkins asked.

"When we get to the point where we strike a balance and the revenues keep coming in, then they will be used for paying off the debt," Secretary Morgenthau replied.

Intimates Deceit.

The Ohio Representative flourished a copy of the Secretary's prepared statement.

"Then this was prepared for the public press, because it says that the money is to be used to pay off the debt, but as a matter of fact that is not so."

Representative Samuel B. Hill (Democrat), of Washington, chairman of the Ways and Means tax sub-committee, backed up the Secretary's statement. He said the committee obviously could not bring out a tax bill that would finance the great bulk of emergency expenditures at one stroke. The plan is to spread this over a number of years, he insisted, arguing that once the volume of emergency spending was scaled down the revenue would go toward paying off the public debt.

Representative Harold Knutson (Republican), of Minnesota, broke in with a quotation from one of the President's messages that "too often in history, governments have been wrecked in too loose a fiscal policy."

Knutson wanted to know what had arisen since the President's budget message to make the new tax program necessary. Without waiting for an answer, he continued:

"What the Republicans hope for is that one of these days a definite announcement will be made that will encourage business and bring an end to this merry-go-round."

Representative Frank Crowther (Republican), New York, pointed to the Secretary's statement that "the time has come" to begin meeting current expenditures, and asked: "Do you think the emergency period has passed?"

"Yes," Morgenthau answered.

"Do you think it is over?"

"I would not say that it is over, but the worst of it has passed."

Representative Roy O. Woodruff (Republican), Michigan, pressed the Treasury head for the Administration's own tax recommendations.

Morgenthau replied it was not his duty to submit such recommendations.

"You mean it is not the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to tell us how much revenue is needed?"

Representative Jere Cooper, (Democrat), Tennessee, hastened to the defense of the witness.

"The Secretary has presented the state of the Treasury," he said, "and with the data available the Secretary thinks the committee is ready to go ahead. And I believe it is."

Morgenthau in his formal statement said the taxes proposed by the President "can be made to yield substantial additions to the revenue of the Federal Government. Referring to the committee's broad range of proposed schedules, he said:

"These proposed taxes rest on the principle of ability to pay. They are devised to draw on accumulation of wealth and income which, for the most part, have been derived from Nation-wide activities. In consequence, their enactment should constitute an important step forward in reshaping our tax structure along sounder and fairer lines."

Utilities Lobby Inquiry Voted To Spare None

holding company bill, but last night's vote will enable the committee to go into lobbying on any utility measure, presumably including the Administration's TVA amendments now pending before the House.

O'Connor pointed out that his committee now has authority not only to subpoena representatives of utility companies, but also to examine into records and accounts for evidence of expenditures for propaganda, fees paid attorneys and agents, and "entertainment costs."

$50,000 Fund Sought.

The $50,000 to be sought today in a companion resolution would provide funds to hire counsel, clerks and pay expenses incident to a thoroughgoing inquiry.

"And if we need more, we will ask for it," said O'Connor.

While House Rules Committee machinery was thrown into mesh, the Senate called up the Wheeler-Rayburn utility holding company bill, around which the lobby storm is brewing. The Senate already has passed the bill, with the "death sentence" section, rejected by the House. A motion was filed yesterday by Senator William H. Dieterich (Democrat), of Illinois, to concur in the House ban on the section.

At the same time, Chairman Burton K. Wheeler, of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, moved to send the bill to conference, in an effort to retain the dissolution proviso.

The Black lobby resolution, providing for the Senate's own inquiry into utility bill propaganda activities, remained on the Senate's calendar, unacted upon. The committee on audit and control had called a meeting yesterday to pass on Senator Hugo L. Black's request for $150,000 to conduct the Senate inquiry, but this was called off pending House action.

Before the House acted last night, Representative John E. Rankin (Democrat), Mississippi, who last week charged "wire tapping" by utilities lobbyists, declared utilities representatives have a private telephone between an exclusive downtown hotel and Capitol Hill. He said it was "not improbable" that they had "eavesdropped on conversations between the White House and Capitol Hill."

The Mississippian charged that some members of the House Military Affairs Committee, not sympathetic with the pending Tennessee Valley Authority amendments, had conferred nightly with lobbyists at their downtown headquarters.

Shortly afterward, Representative Andrew J. May (Democrat), of Kentucky, took the floor to brand Rankin's statements "foul propaganda." He denied either himself or any of his colleagues on the Military Affairs Committee are contacting power lobbyists. May declared the TVA amendments were but another step toward nationalization of the utilities industry.

From another member of the Military Affairs Committee, Representative Donald H. McLean (Republican), New Jersey, came demands for an inquiry into TVA operations. McLean charged failure by officials to accurately report TVA developments to Congress. He accused TVA officialdom of "arrogance" and "contempt of Congress."

Although Corcoran had been "invited" to be present at today's opening of the House utility investigation, the Rules Committee last night had extended no similar invitation either to Emil Hurja, assistant to Postmaster General Farley on the Democratic committee, or Charles West, White House "contact man." Both allegedly were active at the Capitol in behalf of the holding company "death sentence."

For the first time, Section 201, of the revised statutes, which subjects Administration officials to a $500 penalty or a year's imprisonment, by making efforts by them to influence votes a misdemeanor, was mentioned on the floor yesterday. O'Connor said it could be used against officials found guilty of charges of a type brought by Representative Brewster.

Blanton Favors Adjourning.

Opposing prosecution of the lobby investigation by the House, Representative Blanton declared 29 members of the House already are ill from "overwork," and the rest are on the "frazzled edge."

"We ought to adjourn, and go home," he shouted. "I've never seen a bit of good come from a Congressional investigation, and no good will come from this. An appropriation of $50,000 is going too far."

Representative Frederick R. Lehlbach (Republican), New Jersey, joined Blanton in insisting the resolution was "too broad." Lehlbach said the resolution was further subject to criticism because it failed to mention "the Brewster incident."

"This resolution is so broad you can subpena anybody, and they would have to come," declared Lehlbach.

O'Connor retorted that the committee would call no one "for mere scandal mongering."

Representative Earl C. Michener (Republican), Michigan, insisted the committee find out who circulated reports "that the galleries were full of lobbyists" on the day the holding company bill was passed.

Seeking to delay the vote, Blanton made a point of "no quorum" and a call of the House was forced. Later the Texan demanded a division vote on a motion to proceed to consideration of the O'Connor resolution. The motion carried by a vote of 197 to 3.

Earlier in the day, Representative Rankin's charges of continued "wire tapping" and an "unseen government by the power trust," brought a reply from Philip H. Gadsden, chairman of the Committee of Public Utility Executives.

Gadsden said he first believed Rankin's "wire tapping charge was made in jest."

"By repeating that accusation today, Mr. Rankin apparently is beginning to believe his own statement," Gadsden said.

large slice of the works money when the allotment board recommended that $13,869,000 be spent for a group of 14 projects involved in the Los Angeles County flood control development. The construction work will be done by the War Department.

The board failed to recommend any more lump sum State allotments for the works progress division, but such allotments are expected to be made for every State before the end of July. Thus far allotments have been made only for Alabama, Georgia, Indiana, New York City and the District of Columbia.

First Actually Employed.

Announcement that the first group of relief workers actually are employed is expected before the end of the week. Many of these will include employes on FERA jobs transferred to the works program.

PWA State administrators will gather in Washington today to receive instructions from Secretary Ickes. He will explain to them the recent order providing that construction projects costing more than $25,000 are to be directed by the PWA. The administrators will be received by President Roosevelt in the afternoon. Grants totaling $5,110,689 for 40 non-Federal PWA projects were approved by the President yesterday. These will cover 45 per cent of the cost of the work.

Meanwhile, the Rural Resettlement Administration, headed by Undersecretary Tugwell, was studying 102 projects turned over to it by the subsistence homestead and relief administrations. Many of these may be abandoned.

Rabell Indicted On Bribe Charge

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 8.—William H. Rabell, a former accountant and investigator for the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, was indicted by the Federal grand jury today on charges of pretending to be a United States officer and soliciting a bribe.

The alleged offenses, which constitute felonies, occurred subsequent to his dismissal as a commission employe.

J. Edward Jones, dealer in oil royalties, brought about the arrest of the former employe in the Jones home at Scarsdale after—the indictment states—Rabell impersonated a Federal officer and demanded $27,500 from Mrs. Jones and received $250 on account.

England's Bank Moves to Aid Stabilization

London Paper Says Vast Sum Pledged to Support Currencies.

By the Associated Press.

London (Tuesday), July 9.—The Daily Herald says today that Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, has pledged £375,000,000 sterling (about $1,852,500,000) to bring about world stabilization of currency without government agreements.

The money is the publicly owned British exchange equalization fund, to be used, Norman said, "for the support of almost any international currency which shows weakness."

Declaring that the Bank of England entered into an agreement at a secret meeting at Basel, Switzerland, over the week-end "without previous consultation with the treasury," the paper states that British funds may even be called to the defense of the German reichmark in the event of a financial crisis.

"The agreement reached at the international bank is that the governors of all central banks represented shall join in a common action for the future as soon as the first sign appears of any attack on the currencies of any countries concerned," the paper continues. "The position is an amazing one in view of repeated declarations of Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, that Great Britain isn't prepared to consider currency stabilization yet."

The United States Federal Reserve, the Daily Herald says, is not directly concerned with the agreement, which "may easily therefore in practice mean an alliance between the pound and gold bloc countries to the exclusion of the dollar.

U. S. Aid to Stabilize Franc Is Recalled

By the Associated Press.

The report that the British stabilization fund would be used to bolster weak spots in the foreign exchange market aroused interest here in light of indications that the exchange market has been tending toward de facto stabilization.

It recalled the recent intervention of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, administered by Secretary Morgenthau, to tide the French franc over a difficult spot. A run on the franc late in May threatened maintenance of the gold standard in France.

Secretary Morgenthau has served notice the United States would welcome stabilization moves and the action of the dollar control fund in helping the franc was accepted by some Treasury observers as evidence of co-operation with France toward a return to fixed gold parities all around.

However, England has been regarded here as the chief obstacle toward negotiations for definite stabilization agreements among the major trading nations.

Sen. Byrd in Move To Protect AAA

Seeks to Remove Licensing Provisions From Bill.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, yesterday made his contribution to the congressional efforts to save the Farm Administration from the constitutional trouble which beset the ill-fated NRA.

Simultaneously he sought to remove the licensing provisions for fruits and vegetables from the pending AAA amendment bill. In one of three amendments introduced the Virginian would substitute "interstate commerce" in the amendment bill's language attempting to control shipments to "all markets."

In another he sought to strike out all of the bill's fruit and vegetable licensing provisions. In the event the latter were not accepted by the Senate an alternate amendment introduced at the same time would provide that there should be no licensing of any kind unless agreed to by 75 per cent of the growers.

Shirt Frocks Cool and Crisp For Summer

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IN SUMMER a woman's attractiveness often varies inversely with the temperature. When the mercury soars into the nineties, she sometimes becomes correspondingly rumpled and wilted. That is why it is so important to pick out a dress that will look spotless and unwrinkled at the end of a long hot day. We came across just such a one the other day while browsing around a Washington department store. It is a shirtmaker dress which differs from the ordinary shirtmaker in that it is made by a factory which gets out men's shirts. Hence, it is strictly tailored, with an attention to detail seldom found in most women's clothes of like price. The stitching around skirt bands and pleats is so carefully done as to give an unusually smart and finished air to the whole outfit. The dress comes in several different models. We particularly liked an adorable little two-piece number in pale pink, which has very masculine looking shirt tails to be tucked into the skirt. The short sleeved blouse has an attractive little accordion-pleated arrangement at the neck, which adds a delightfully feminine touch to the ensemble.

Another dress, one-piece, has tiny buttons all the way down the front, and two convenient little breast pockets. These models are ideal for golf or office work, or simply for trotting around town. Prices range from $7.50 to $12.75. A bit more expensive than some other summer dresses, perhaps, but they are smart, and wear like iron.

Sun Tan Cosmetics.

Let's get this sun tan question settled now, once for all, and then we'll say nothing more about it for the rest of the summer. To tan or not to tan—by this time you have undoubtedly made up your mind which you will do. But whether you tan or not, you'll probably need some sort of cream this summer, whether you use it for deepening and preserving your tan or simply for protection against the rays of the sun. A well-known cosmetics house has just gotten out a series of creams and powders which completely covers the sun situation. For those who wish to get brown without being burnt to a crisp, there is a sun proof cream which, applied lightly, enables you to achieve a rich, uniform tan. If applied lavishly, the same cream will preserve the natural color of your skin. Another cream has the double advantage of warding off freckles and being water-proof as well, which means that you can lie on the beach, and then go in for a dip, all without applying the cream a second time. In addition, this house puts out several shades of powder suitable for summer skins. You'll want the light shade with your delicate pastel frocks, and the darker shades with sport clothes or bright-colored evening dresses. Anyway, all of them will make you look brown. These creams and powders range in price rom $1 to $3, and are on sale at two downtown department stores.

For Packing Cosmetics.

One of the nice things about summer is the fact that one can get away from it all occasionally for a week-end in the country or at the seashore. But just as many nice things have a not-so-bright side; so there is a great problem in the lives of most feminine week - enders. This is the problem of transporting one's make-up without breaking or losing the various articles en route. How to keep bottles from leaking, jars from breaking, and powder from spilling has been the cause of many a Friday to Monday headache. The harassed traveler usually ends by flinging bottles, tubes, and jars helter-skelter into a corner of her suitcase, and hoping vaguely that they will stay put—which, of course, they never do.

So it is rather with a feeling of triumphant discovery that we announce the arrival in a local department store of a compact beauty kit which contains all the ingredients one would be apt to want over the week-end in the beauty line. These are a lotion, cologne, powder, and rouge. The lotion serves a double purpose as both a sun cream and a powder base. The cologne is ideal as a "freshener-upper" after play. If the powder and the rouge don't happen to be your particular shade, you may exchange them for any other shade at the store where purchased. Not only is this box useful, but attractively gotten up as well. On the outside are gay crayon sketches depicting vacation pastimes, such as swimming, riding, golf, and tennis. In the background is a sprinkling of stars, moons, sea-gulls, and other motifs. And all for $2.50.

Walnut Pipe Racks.

Somebody who is looking for a gift for her Uncle Joe or Cousin Sam might like to know about the pipe racks featured in a local store. These are small racks made of solid black walnut and padded with felt on the bottom to prevent their scratching a smooth surface. They come in two sizes, full and half, and range in price from $1.

Adverse Criticism of Contemporary Radio Programs Called "Petty and Unwarranted" by Woman Reader; Other Opinions Voiced.

By Mary Haworth.

DISCUSSION of the faults and virtues of present-day radio programs is continued today, in the form of additional letters from readers roused to comment by the scathing indictment of radio voiced a week ago by a young housewife who signed herself "Fed-Up."

• • • •

Among today's letters are two from persons who find much to defend and little to criticize, in contemporary radio programs. The third letter, which gives the concensus of opinion of "Eight Post Readers," all women, "wholeheartedly supports the logical criticism of . . . 'Fed-Up.'"

Criticism Called "Petty."

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: There is so much that is good on the radio that all this adverse criticism seems petty and unwarranted. It recalls the time when Alexander Woolcott was giving his most enjoyable radio talks and some listeners-in would write to criticize his manner of pronouncing a word.

• • • •

Out of the great variety of programs offered, certainly it should be possible to find something to suit every taste, every grade of intelligence, the entertainment demands of those from every walk of life.

• • • •

With regard to advertising over the radio, I should imagine the sponsors of Sunday radio programs would approve of dispensing with advertising about as much as publishers of Sunday newspapers would! We certainly don't want to have to pay a radio tax, nor do we want the foreign method of radio broadcasting.

HOUSEWIFE.

Radio "Greatest Enjoyment."

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: My husband and I have been reading your column and thinking of all the good things you have been doing. Lately, we notice, the "radio knocker" has invaded your sanctum sanctorum.

If those persons had a home in the country I believe they would get an entirely different slant on living, and particularly on radio. Although a native of Washington, D. C., I find myself living almost like a hermit in my suburban home. My radio is my greatest and practically only means of enjoyment. Since I have had it I constantly think: "Isn't life grand and glorious!" I did not know it was possible to be so happy.

• • • •

I pass the word concerning my favorite entertainers along to my neighbors and friends, and I have yet to encounter a radio "peeve" among them. The letter you printed last Thursday, signed "Contented," struck a responsive chord in my heart, as I am contented with radio, too.

• • • •

I wish these radio critics would stop carping. The sponsors pay good money for their time on the air and they do not demand that we listen in. If we happen to like the program it costs us nothing. And if they don't want to listen in, who cares? After all, there are those who do.

CONTENTED LISTENER.

Radio Sales Talks "Boring."

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: We are voicing herewith the opinion of a two-table bridge crowd which whole-heartedly supports the logical criticism of present day radio programs presented in your column last Monday by a young housewife, who signed herself—"Fed-Up."

• • • •

All of us ceased long ago to listen to imbecilic, boring sales talks over the air. Why can't our radio experts learn from Europe how to present clever, tactful sales-propaganda? Of course, there are a few exceptional programs which deserve praise, but the majority deserve the criticism voiced by "Fed-Up." Sincerely,

Snug Bodice and Full Trousers Make This an Ideal Play Outfit

Pattern No. 734.

CALL IT PAJAMA, overall, playsuit, what you will—it is the most convenient of summer playtogs. The bodice is cut so well that no brassiere is necessary. The wide shoulder-straps cross in the back and do away with slipping straps. The trousers are wide at the bottom and roomy. And the pockets are really big enough for garden tools or campers' odds and ends.

There are just six pieces in this accurately cut pattern. Choose a linen, denim, sailcloth, gingham or jersey for the fabric. Cut in sizes 12 to 20; 30 to 38. Size 16 (34) requires 3⅜ yards of 35 inch fabric.

Wives' Death Rate Below Spinsters' Beyond Age of 34

Summer brides now have the statistical assurance that by marrying they are bettering their chances for living to a ripe old age.

Recent reports of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. show that while the death rate for spinsters in the age periods between 15 and 34 years is lower than that for wives, yet after the age of 34 married women have a progressively lower death rate than spinsters.

From the age of 20 through the greater part of their lives, both spinsters and married women have a lower death rate than widows and divorced women.

The fact that married women under 35 have a higher death rate than spinsters is ascribed largely to the results of child bearing, particularly the birth of the first child.

What TODAY Means

"Cancer."

IF JULY 9 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:15 to 11:15 a. m., from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m. and from 7:15 to 9:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:15 to 9:15 a. m., from 11:15 a. m. to 1:15 p. m. and from 4:15 to 6:15 p. m.

You will have to be tactful regarding what you say on this day if you wish to avoid running the danger of making an enemy. People's feelings are liable to be very sensitive, so it might pay to handle with silk gloves every one you contact. Business should be decidedly on the upgrade, presenting many opportunities to make money. A friendly attitude probably will be noticeable in those occupying executive positions, so that a matter of approach should be comparatively easy. Social activities can be safely undertaken, as any form of entertainment is more than likely to prove a great success. Married and engaged couples, as well as those engaged in billing and cooing, may find this an auspicious day for asking favors, as there is an excellent chance they will be readily granted.

If a woman and July 9 is your birthday, you will make a grave mistake if you permit a feeling of dissatisfaction to dominate you. Eliminate it by letting your thoughts dwell on the many things you have to be grateful for, and be optimistically confident that errors will give way to persuasive measures on your part. You may be agreeably surprised by a series of lucky events that will bring you happiness. Be careful absent-mindedness is not misconstrued as snobbishness, as this is a thing to be guarded against on this date. It will be wise to exercise caution in shopping, as there is a possibility of a tendency prevailing to exaggerate some of the values of goods being offered as marvelous bargains.

You are versatile, so should be capable of doing work which requires a combination of the artistic and practical sales ability. Interior decorating, designing, writing and teaching, are among the activities through which you are apt to earn a satisfactory income. If domestic life does not bore you, your marriage should be successful.

The child born on July 9 generally, when it reaches school age, requires to be taught the necessity of learning to concentrate.

If a man and July 9 is your natal day, your ambitions are likely to cause you to have too many irons in the fire for your own good. If you will not undertake to do more than you can personally give the proper attention to, you should make a great deal of money. Law, medicine, horticulture and art, are some of the mediums through which you are likely to succeed.

Mme Hayama, of the Japanese embassy, poses beside a vase of lilies arranged in the Japanese style. The simplicity of line, and the fact that very few flowers are used in this arrangement is typically Japanese

Floral Grouping Stressed as Mind Training, Says Mme. Hayama.

By Dudley Harmon.

"WEN A JAPANESE girl of good family wishes to impress a beau, she not only tells him she is a good cook and seamstress, but—and this is just as important—that she is good at arranging flowers, as well."

So declares Mme. Hayama, wife of the third secretary of the Japanese embassy, Mme. Hayama, an expert herself, thinks that Americans could learn much from Japan in the art of grouping and arranging flowers. With us, she believes, it is a more or less haphazard affair of filling a vase with different flowers, without eye to arrangement, whereas in her country it is definitely an art, requiring patience, specialized knowledge, and great skill.

It takes a Japanese girl from 7 to 15 years to learn to arrange flowers according to Japanese standards, said Mme. Hayama. Special instructors are hired by the girl's family, and they may spend several hours a day showing her different arrangements and directing her tastes.

Practised for 1,200 Years.

Nor is this emphasis on art in flower arrangement merely a passing vogue. It began 1,200 years ago and has been gaining in practice since. The decorative aspect of flower arrangement is only secondary. It was primarily to train the mind that the idea was adopted. Scholars and artists found that the patience and attention to detail, which this art requires are excellent training for success in other fields. Soldiers were expected at one time to be better fighters if they could arrange flowers artistically. The art is supposed to impart a moral as well as an esthetic uplift.

Anyone familiar with Japanese art, knows that simplicity is its keynote. A Japanese painting on silk, often will depict only two objects—a willow tree and a bird, for instance. This same simplicity is the secret of Japanese flower arrangement. Seldom are more than two or three kinds of flowers employed, so that the effect is one of silhouette rather than of profusion. The Japanese also employ other material than flowers. They make use of twigs, shoots, moss, and even dead branches. The emphasis is primarily on line, with color and material only secondary. One twisted shoot, with a few roses beside it, is to them more beautiful than a mass of roses.

Tree Blooms Extensively Used.

While Japan produces many flowers known to America, it is largely the flowering trees that are used in these arrangements. Camellias, azeleas and plum blossoms are among the favorites. Many of the arrangements are symbolic. For example, an arrangement of plum blossoms, evergreen and bamboo symbolizes enduring happiness and is often used on New Year's Day. Stems pointing different ways have special significance. In fact, flower arrangement in Japan speaks a language all its own.

In every well-to-do Japanese home there is usually an alcove in the wall, in which the master of the house displays his greatest treasures. Here is where the vase of flowers is placed. Unlike the American vase, it can be viewed from only one angle. The arrangement must suit the room. If the latter is small, only a few flowers will do, but if it is large and elaborately decorated, the arrangement may be more ornate. The more ambitious sometimes endeavor to harmonize the flowers with the garden outside. This is because the walls of Japanese houses are often thrown open to the garden.

Madame Hayama described the ritual and etiquette surrounding the arranging of flowers in her country. The prime purpose of flower arrangement is to suit the tastes of guests. When a guest enters the room, he is supposed to go immediately to the alcove and intently examine the exhibit. Although it is not considered polite to examine too closely, he may ask such questions as to how the stems are held in place. Usually words of praise and admiration are expected of him. Sometimes special phrases are used to express admiration, fitting to the flowers themselves. For example, elaborate arrangements call for elaborate language, and vice versa.

"Flower meetings" are very popular in Japan. At these meetings, the host shows his guests a certain arrangement and then asks them to experiment with the same flowers to see whether they can do any better. Many hours are thus pleasantly spent in grouping and regrouping for special effects.

Six Schools of Arrangement.

There are six different schools of flower arrangement in Japan, each of them with its own theories and esthetic standards. Many books have been published on the subject. In speaking of an arrangement of vines, one of them says, "This vine is effective only when used daringly, and has no value cut short." Another shows how to gain the effect of coolness, in summertime, by the use of a large, flat, shallow basin, where the expanse of water visible is greater than it would be in a vase.

Mme. Hayama believes that the Americn way of arranging flowers is too careless and hastily done to be really beautiful. She thinks that by mixing many kinds of flowers together in one bowl or vase we arrive at an ornate and over-elaborate effect. According to her, the effect would be more artistic if we spent more time in selecting and arranging just a few flowers, instead of many.

Recipes Clear Up Questions On 2 Cheeses

Sour Cream Dish Needs No Cooking; Milk Curd, However, Does.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE previously mentioned fact that a delectable creamy cheese can be made from sour cream has brought in a flurry of queries. This cheese can be prepared from soured cream without cooking. This is one point that brings many misgivings, especially from the woman who has been accustomed to making cottage cheese from heated sour milk.

Here, then, is the difference in the sour cream and sour milk cheese, with recipes for both. The sour milk or cottage cheese is heated and washed with hot water, which process hardens the casein in the milk producing a fine curd. The sour cream cheese is not heated with the result that there is no curd and the product resembles a soft spready cream cheese.

Be sure that the cream has soured until a good clabber is formed before attempting to make the cheese. If the cream in your refrigerator shows just the faintest traces of sourness, take it from the refrigerator and allow it to stand overnight at room temperature or until a good clabber is formed. Then make the cheese immediately, as longer standing at room temperature will give the cream a stale or unpleasant flavor.

Tie the sour cream in a bag made of cheesecloth. Let it hang from a spigot in the sink as you would a jelly bag. When all the whey has dripped off, season the soft creamy mass to taste with salt and a bit of chopped pimiento, green pepper, or chives. Chill before serving.

Cottage Cheese.

Heat very slowly 1 quart sour milk to lukewarm over warm water and turn into a strainer lined with cheese cloth. Pour over 1 quart warm water, and as soon as the water has drained through, pour over another quart; then repeat again. Gather cheesecloth around curd to form a bag and let hang until curd is free from whey. Moisten with melted butter and heavy cream and add salt to taste.

Query: Should the sauce for a Spanish omelet be cooked with the eggs or should it be added after the omelet has been cooked and turned out on the platter for serving? Could you please print a recipe for the Spanish sauce?

Answer: The sauce may be added to the omelet during the cooking if you prefer. Beat the eggs, add the other ingredients as for plain omelet, and turn into a buttered omelet pan. When the eggs begin to cook add the Spanish sauce. Finish cooking the omelet in a moderate oven (350° F.).

The sauce for a Spanish omelet where the vegetables are cooked in with the eggs is cooked for only 3 minutes, while a sauce which is to be added after the omelet has been turned out on a platter should be cooked for about 15 minutes. Here are the two variations:

Spanish Sauce (Cook 3 Minutes):

1 medium sized tomato
1 small green pepper
½ onion
2 sprigs parsley
Olives
Mushrooms
Salt and pepper
1 stalk celery.

Peel the tomato, add the pepper, onion, parsley, celery, olives, mushrooms, and chop all together in a chopping bowl. Place the mixture in a saucepan, add seasonings and stew for two or three minutes. This amount is enough for a four-egg omelet.

Spanish Sauce.

2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons onion, finely chopped
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon sugar
Dash of cayenne
2 tablespoons green pepper, finely chopped
½ cup mushroom, thinly sliced
1 cup canned tomatoes, pulp and juice.

Melt butter, add onion, and cook until a golden brown. Add remaining ingredients and cook over low flame 15 minutes, or until vegetables are tender. Makes enough sauce for an omelet that will serve six.

Gains Made in Tuberculosis Surgery

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

IT appears that no region of the body is sacred to the surgeon. He regards no structure or organ as extra-territorial. The brain and spinal cord have long since been invaded and even the heart has yielded to the skill of those who "operate."

Before discussing the applications of surgery to tuberculosis we should recall that when tubercle bacilli grow in lung tissues they form tubercles or nodules which may coalesce, that is, clump together. Unless growth is arrested—and this occurs in most cases—these nodules containing active bacilli may break into a bronchus (a tube carrying air to the lung cells). As a result the individual coughs up large quantities of mucus mixed with bacteria. If the resistance is high the disease may be arrested by nature's method of cure—namely, surrounding the diseased area with a firm capsule of cells (scar tissue) impregnated with lime. If, however, resistance is low the disease may continue to progress, destroying more and more lung tissue.

Unfortunately, there is no specific treatment for tuberculosis, although vaccines of various types have been suggested and new forms are being tried. It is not possible, for example, to kill tubercle bacilli as we can destroy the organisms of syphilis with arsenic compounds, or the parasites of malaria with quinine. Treatment, therefore, resolves itself into building the patient's resistance and placing the lung at rest. Healing can occur only when the inflamed area is not irritated by movement.

Important progress has been made through the use of artificial pneumothorax (introducing air between the two pleural layers), which process must be repeated from time to time as the air in the pleural cavity absorbs slowly and thus permits the lung to expand.

Was Hailed as Panacea.

Another method of placing the lung at rest is by cutting or crushing the phrenic nerve on one side, thus paralyzing one-half of the diaphram—the huge muscle which separates the chest from the abdominal cavity. This can be done by a simple operation that leaves a scarcely noticeable scar. Crushing the nerve results in a temporary paralysis which is maintained for approximately three months. Cutting the nerve is usually followed by complete paralysis. The latter is often the best plan in cases in which adhesions between the two layers of the pleura will not permit collapse of the lung when air is introduced.

When paralysis of the diaphragm was first introduced a few years ago it was hailed as the great panacea.

Percentage of Cases Requiring Operation Small, He Says.

It was found, however, that it was dangerous to employ this method of treatment should cavities be present in the upper portion of the lungs. The procedure is now regarded as important but not in itself curative.

Because of the difficulty in securing collapse of the lung—and hence rest— in old, unhealed cases, the suggestion was offered about 40 years ago that sections of several ribs might be removed, thus permitting the chest wall to retract or cave in. It was thought that this would bring about contraction of the lung regardless of adhesions. The operation (called thorocoplasty), when tried, proved a real success and has been followed by excellent results in numerous cases. The patient is often fitted with a brace so that pressure can be maintained on the caved-in chest, thus preventing future expansion. Some deformity of the chest wall results but this should not be considered when other curative methods have proved unavailing.

The number of cases of tuberculosis requiring surgical intervention is not high—possibly not over 1 per cent—when one considers the sum total of infected individuals. Nevertheless, experts in tuberculosis recognize that surgery has added its bit to the percentage of recoveries. Naturally, only skilled surgeons should attempt lung operations. Bed rest, good food, and expert management remain our chief mainstays in the great majority of cases.

BAKER.

AUTHORITY over the British civil service is divided between the Treasury and the Civil Service Commission, with the former dominant. Unlike the American system, the Treasury takes most of the responsibility Commission handling examinations and granting certificates of qualification.

Even in its with the limited field of authority the commission must obtain Treasury approval in regard to such vital matters as:

1. Directing the manner of admitting candidates to the examination such as determining whether the examination is to be open competition, limited competition, or pass.

2. Fixing the conditions for grant of certificate.

3. Determining the situations for which examinations shall be held, and the time when they shall be given.

4. Reserving posts to men, and making special regulations for the examination of women.

5. Making exemptions from examination.

In all other personal matters, aside from examination, the Treasury is supreme. The branch of the Treasury which directs this work is known as the Establishment Division.

In all of the larger departments there is an "establishment" officer who is responsible for personnel matters in his department. He ranks with the head of the main divisions and is directly responsible to the head of the department. The establishment officer's duties include such problems as supervision of probation, promotion, transfer, retirement, discontinuance of unnecessary work, adoption of labor-saving devices and maintenance of personnel records.

Harmony in personnel matters is fostered by a committee whose membership is composed of the establishment officers of the principal departments. This standing group advises the Treasury on personnel and obtains cooperation between the departments. How humane is this system as compared to the custom in Washington! The English were amazed to hear of the wholesale and sudden personnel shifts that have grown to great proportions under the New Deal.

In summary, recruitment is the function of the Civil Service Commission exclusively; the regulation of other phases of personnel administration falls to the Treasury, with the advice of the standing committee; the application of the Treasury regulations and the intimate detailed management of personnel is the function of the department acting through the establishment officer.

Appointments to the Civil Service Commission are made by His Majesty in Council. The term of office is indefinite and tenure is at pleasure. Long terms, leading to continuity of policy and strict political neutrality are the rule.

The Government does not attempt to control the examining work of the commission. A precedent was set in 1857 and has not been threatened since. Lord Palmerston, then prime minister, was rebuffed in an attempt to bring pressure to bear upon the commission in favor of one of his nominees.

Sir Stanley Leathes, who served as civil service commissioner for more than 20 years, testified that during this long period he only twice saw a minister on commission business, although he often conferred with ministers on the business of their departments.

Although the Treasury has to approve many of the commission's decisions, the latter is not subordinate to the former.

Tomorrow classification in the British system will be discussed.

Athletic associations of AAA, State Department, NRA and FHC are treking to Glen Echo Park these hot nights to splash in Crystal Pool.

Appeals to Veterans.

Veterans in service at Navy Yard are particularly urged by John Arthur Shaw (F), director of the Veterans Preference League, to contact him at Room 713, Insurance Building, 907 Fifteenth street northwest. Director Shaw also invites all veterans in Government service to communicate with him.

Gerald Small Reelected.

Gerald F. Small, (P), Marine Corps Headquarters, has been reelected assistant general secretary to the Esperanto Association of North America at the association's twenty-eighth annual convention in New York.

Mr. Small also is president of the local Esperanto Chapter and is the conductor of Esperanto classes at Langley Junior High School for Boy Scouts.

McWilliams Victorious Over Hillman for City Counselor.

Party Captures 6 Of 8 Council Posts

Only G.O.P. Candidates to Win Those in 4th Ward, Unopposed.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., July 8.—Turning out in numbers that far exceeded expectations of ward workers, Democrats of Annapolis won a sweeping victory in the biennial municipal election today.

Louis N. Phipps, automobile dealer, who headed the ticket for Mayor, was swept into office by the unprecedented majority of 519 over T. Roland Brown, president of the Annapolis Water Co., the Republican standard bearer.

William J. McWilliams, Democratic candidate for city counselor, defeated Noah H. Hillman, by a majority of 351. The Democrats elected their aldermanic candidates in the First, Second and Third wards. The Republican membership in the incoming council will be limited to the two Negro aldermen from the Fourth Ward, heart of the colored vote. The Democrats did not put candidates into the field against them.

It is the first time in six years that the Democrats have put their candidate for mayor over, Walter E. Quenstedt, Republican, having been succesful for three successive terms.

Blow to G. O. P. Chiefs.

Two years ago the G. O. P. also managed to elect their counselor. Todya's result, amounting to a rout, was a stunning blow to the Republican leaders. State leaders, including Gov. Harry W. Nice, also manifested a keen interest in the balloting.

The total vote for mayor was: Phipps, 1,550; Brown, 1,031, and for counselor, McWilliams, 1,248; Hillman, 1,078.

The vote for aldermen was:

First Ward, Jasse A. Fisher, Democrat (incumbent), 398; Harry M. Leitch, Democrat (incumbent), 362; Harry S. Kenchington, Republican, 146; Clifton J. Russell, Republican, 140.

Second Ward, Arthur T. Elliott, Democrat (incumbent), 530; J. William Graham, Democrat, 478; Roscoe G. Rowe, jr., Republican, 238; Charles H. Sherman, Republican, 207.

Third Ward, John M. Green, Democrat, 659; Elmer M. Jackson, Democrat (incumbent), 542; Samuel S. Stokes, Republican, 227; John A. Moody, Republican, 203.

Elections for mayor for more than a decade have been decided by a mere handful of votes. Four years ago when Mayor Quenstedt was elected for his second term, official returns gave him a majority of 23. His election was contested by Charles E. Chance and the margin was reduced to one.

Forces Organized.

Democratic forces were well organized throughout the city for today's battle. Early reports were that Phipps would be cut heavily in the First and Second wards, normally Democrtic strongholds, but the opposition did not materialize. Brown was beaten in the First, his home section for half a century, by more than 200 majority. Phipps also has resided in that ward for the last several years. The Second Ward also gave Phipps a majority of more than 200, but the Third Ward, where Phipps formerly resided and where he is engaged in business, proved the banner section. It polled the heaviest vote of the city—more than 800— and the majority for Phipps was 365.

Arrest Made.

Early voting was enlivened by the arrest of "Bluebird" Johnson, Negro, on charges of illegally transporting intoxicating liquor through the city, and conspiring to violate the corrupt practices act. Johnson is in Anne Arundel County Jail awaiting further investigation by Sheriff Joseph W. Alton and other county officials.

Republican leaders asserted that the incident was part of a coup engineered by their Democratic rivals to send a number of Negro voters out of the city on a picnic, thereby reducing the Republican vote. Sheriff Alton said he received a tip last night that such a movement was afoot and the arrest of Johnson was the result of activities of G. O. P. leaders in the Fourth Ward, Negro section of the city.

Sheriff Alton rounded up three motor buses which it was claimed were to be used to transport the Negroes to Jones Station, 8 miles north of Annapolis, where the picnic was to be held. Questioning one of the drivers, the sheriff learned that beer had been taken from a house in the Fourth Ward to the home of a Negro at Jones Station. He went to the latter place and confiscated ten cases of beer.

Recent Trends.

Democrats have dominated city affairs for 30 years, but the Republicans had been gaining ground steadily in the last decade. Republicans succeeded in electing the counselor two years ago. These with the two Negro aldermen from the Fourth Ward gave them a line-up of four against six Democrats. Republican leaders had concentrated efforts on the head of the ticket and one alderman from each the First and Third Wards.

Harman Freed In Britt Death As Judge Acts

By the Associated Press.

Staunton, Va., July 8.—At the direction of Judge Richard S. Ker a jury in corporation court today acquitted Robert D. Harman, 24, of all responsibility for the death of Roy Britt at the Staunton Fairgrounds in September, 1933.

Harman surrendered about two months ago in order, he testified today, that he might ease his conscience and clear up the mystery which had baffled Staunton police for a year and a half.

Judge Ker held that evidence in the brief trial today showed that Harman was defending himself when Britt was killed.

Harman served as the only witness in his defense, saying that Britt jumped upon a running board of his car on the last night of the Staunton Fair. He said that he pushed Britt from the car.

During the brief scuffle, he said, his automobile had swung in toward a fence. In order to avoid striking the fence, Harman threw the machine in reverse and swung the steering wheel. He presumed that the rear bumper or some other part of the car struck Britt.

Harman told the jury that Britt had threatened him earlier in the day.

Harman pleaded not guilty at the opening of the trial and Commonwealth's Attorney Herbert J. Taylor said he hoped only for a manslaughter verdict, admitting he did not have sufficient evidence to sustain a charge of first degree murder.

Light Plant Inundated; Bolt Kills 1

Severe Electric Storm Sweeps Southwest Virginia Area.

By the Associated Press.

A woman was killed by lightning and the Glen Lyn plant of the Appalachian Power Co., near Narrows, was damaged to the extent of $150,000 in electrical storms which swept sections of southwest Virginia, particularly Tazewell and Giles counties, Sunday night and yesterday.

From elsewhere in the Old Dominion yesterday came reports of heavy rains and midsummer storms, but none were as severe as those centering in the mountain country about Bluefield.

Mrs. Nora Hellman Dollar, 20-year-old mother, of Tazewell County, was killed by lightning as she nursed her child. The infant was knocked unconscious by the bolt, but will recover.

Cloudburst Strikes.

A three-hour cloudburst on East River Sunday night threw a wall of water down the stream, piling cinder mud and rock against the Glen Lyn plant to a depth of about 8 feet, sweeping 11 feet deep across the machinery there, damaging the Norfolk & Western Railway roadbed at this point, inundating crops, and blocking State Highway No. 8. The mountainland flood struck without warning.

Page County had more cause to rejoice because of heavy July rains, which were fairly common over a large part of Virginia. The town of Luray received its first rain in two months and farmers in the surrounding countryside estimated they will benefit by many thousands of dollars.

Harrisonburg reported a miniature flood as the result of more than an inch of rainfall over that city in an hour and a half. Storm sewers were blocked, automobile engines put out of commission, and low street crossings so inundated as to force detours at several points.

Escapes Drowning.

P. Lugrin, superintendent of the Glen Lyn plant, narrowly escaped drowning while trying to reach it. His auto was halted by water as he crossed the Norfolk & Western tracks near the plant. He stepped out and was swept down by the current, being halted by a fence surrounding the sub-station.

Norfolk & Western track forces worked through the night, repairing the damage done to fills by the cloudburst. One train was delayed for 6 hours and another for 3½, but both tracks had been reopened by 7 o'clock this morning.

Temperatures Drop With Heavy Rainfall

By the Associated Press.

Charleston, W. Va., July 18.—Temperatures fell in West Virginia today, pushed downward from the 100-degree mark by storms that caused several thousands of dollars property damage.

Near White Sulphur Springs, normally quiet, Howard's Run surged over its banks and washed out ballast beneath the tracks of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad blocking passenger trains on the main line for several hours. No one was injured.

In the Eastern Panhandle, the almost general storm was confined to an electrical display. Temperatures in the Martinsburg area dropped from a high of 93 degrees that had remained constant over the week-end.

Weston, W. Va., July 7.—Orval Lambert, 32, an ex-convict, who is in the Lewis County jail charged with chicken theft, faces a life term in the State penitentiary as a habitual criminal. Walkout Shuts Shirt Factory After Pay Cuts Company Says Demoralization After End of NRA Was Cause.

By the Associated Press.

Fredericksburg, Va., July 8.—Operations of the Fredericksburg Shirt Co., owned by the Morris Wineman Co., of Baltimore, were almost at a standstill today following a walkout by practically the entire force in protest of a cut in wages and a boost in working hours.

Only one woman employe and three male workers remained on duty this morning when announcement was made of a second 10 per cent wage cut since abandonment of the NRA. Hours of work were increased from 36 to 44 per week.

Seven girls later returned to their machines but others declared they would not work under the new cut, which becomes effective next week.

The workers refused to complete goods now in the plant when urged by Ernest G. Leitch, manager, to stick to their jobs. Under the NRA employes received $12 for 36 hours of work a week; this was reduced to $10 and then $7 for a 44-hour week and workers said they would not continue under the second reduction.

The management stated the wage cut was necessary because of the demoralized condition of the industry since abolition of NRA. Wholesale price-cutting, they said, made it imperative to reduce expenses or suspend operations.

There was no disorder in connection with the walkout. Workers in the plant are not organized.

Couple Freed, Abduction Plot Tip a Failure

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., July 8.—A man tentatively identified as Cecil Watts, arrested with a young woman at Millwood, Clarke County, late Saturday afternoon, was released today after officers were satisfied that there was no basis for believing they intended to kidnap Mrs. Charles H. Consolvo, of Millwood and Baltimore.

Officers from Waynesboro, Pa., came to Clarke County today, police in Winchester learned, but failed to identify either of those held.

Car Notation Found.

The couple was arrested in an automobile in the vicinity of the home of Mrs. Mary Byrd Consolvo, wife of Col. Charles H. Consolvo, Maryland and Virginia hotel operator, after complaint had been made that they had kept the Consolvo home under surveillance for more than a week. Officers said they found a notation of the license of Mrs. Consolvo's car among effects of the man and woman.

The officers also found among the personal effects of the man a penciled sketch of a woman which Consolvo and a note that her car they said closely resembled Mrs. was driven by a liveried chauffeur.

Efforts of Mrs. Consolvo to contact Clarke County officers were unsuccessful Saturday when she decided to inform Winchester authorities of the strange automobile and State Officer R. E. Bayliss, of this city, and Deputy Sheriff J. W. Newcome went to Millwood where they questioned the man and woman. They took the couple to jail in Berryville.

Charges Lacking.

There they declined to give additional information and the officers said it was impossible to charge them with any offense save an irregularity in their automobile licenses. Two sets were found, one for Florida and the other for the District of Columbia. Their car was observed to carry first one and then the other set during the course of about a week, according to the officers' report.

Finger-prints of the man were sent to the Department of Justice, but it is understood they were unidentified. Mrs. Consolvo was in Baltimore today but a statement attributed to her asserts she denied that she feared kidnaping but said the couple had acted suspiciously.

Merit to Rule Highway Job In Maryland

New Employes Will Be From Eligible List, Jones Says.

'Temporary Appointees' and Politics Barred From Program.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, July 8.—Whatever reorganizations are effected within the State roads commission, State Employment Commissioner Harry C. Jones is convinced new employes will come from the eligible rolls or the re-employment list—and will be under the merit system.

Jones announced today that 1,000 men are eligible for jobs under the commission and that 175 additional are listed for re-employment. Expansion of personnel is anticipated when projects begin under the Federal public works fund.

Maryland's share of the money, to be used in road construction and grade-crossing elimination, is $7,700,000.

Re-employment List Basis.

Jones said new appointments would be made first from the re-employment list, provided workers properly qualified are on that list and geographical considerations do not interfere.

"Geographical considerations," he defined as meaning appointees would be named—if suitably qualified—from areas close to the projects on which they will work.

Political preferences are not to be considered under the merit system, Jones said, and pointing out his office was seeking to eliminate employes of the State known as "temporary appointees," who are named to jobs before they have taken the State civil service examination.

County Engineer Rumor.

Te said there were 668 "temporary appointees" out of 9,400 State employes when he took office.

Asked about rumors the roads commission is planning to eliminate its district engineers and appoint an engineer for each county, in addition to a number of supervising engineers to control the county posts, Jones said he knew nothing of the plan, but added:

"My business is to see that those who are employed by the State are employed from the re-employment list or the eligible list. That I propose to do."

Mother-in-Law Jails Washington Resident

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Staunton, Va., July 8.—Roy Gregory, formerly of Augusta County, but now a resident of Washington, is in jail here on charges filed by his mother-in-law, Mrs. Mae Powers, of this county. She charged that Gregory attempted to run her and several small children down with his automobile. Gregory is being held on charges of disorderly conduct, attempted assault, and reckless driving.

Gregory was preparing to return to Washington when the difficulty arose.

Statistics Reveal Average Weekly "Movie" Attendance in U. S. Is 75,000,000

One-Fourth of Stars Are Not American Born

Other Findings Disclosed; Film Shortage Feared; Theater Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

The editorial staff of the Martin Quigley publications, which include the Motion Picture Herald, foremost of the cinema's trade journals, and the Motion Picture Almanac, a year-book of incalculable value to the drama desks as a reference work, possesses an insatiable lust for statistics.

Not only do the investigative gentleman on Mr. Quigley's pay roll keep a monthly check on the key city box-offices of the country, to ascertain which are the "Box-Office Champions" in the given month, but they also deduce other important facts from the records of the industry for their own and the public's amazement.

For instance, the 1935-36 edition of the Almanac, just off the presses, reveals that one-fourth of the ranking stars of the so-called American motion picture industry are not native born Americans at all.

Average Up in Years.

Twenty-eight per cent of the 96 stars who appeared in the "box office champions" of the past year were born in other lands, from the British West Indies to Dalmatia. More than 12 per cent of them have appeared in foreign-made pictures at one time or another.

Furthermore, and contrary to popular impression, the screen is not an outlet for talents that are exclusively juvenile. Most of the leading stars are well past the first flush of youth and getting along toward what might be termed an accumulation of years. The average age of the stars is 34.

It is pointed out that if it is actually true that life begins at 40, the male stars of the screen are just about ready to begin the sorely involved business of living—their average age being 39.

The feminine stars are a bit younger, to be sure, but, even so, are on the very brink of 30 in an averaging of ages that span the gulf between Shirley Temple's 6 and May Robson's 70.

Nine to a Seat!

Leaping now to the other side of the picture, it is estimated from the most reliable figures available that motion picture attendance throughout the United States approximates 75,000,000 weekly. Between 75 and 85 per cent of all adult admissions to the "movies," it is discovered, are purchased between the hours of 7:30 and 8:30 p. m.

It will not be difficult for those who stand in line to buy tickets, stand patiently in packed lobbies, waiting their turns to gain admission to the auditorium, and then stand behind pretty plush ropes until there are available seats, to believe that there are nine persons to every theater seat in cities of more than 100,000 population. Total seating capacity of all theaters is placed at 11,132,000.

Quite a business, this flicker industry has grown into!

No new openings are scheduled for tonight in Washington's summer theaters. Having inaugurated the run of "The Bride the Sun Shines On," a lively farce by Will Cotton, who diverted his talents temporarily from the drawing board of the caricaturist to write this comedy, on Fourth of July night, the National Civic Theater Society will continue the run of the piece through the current week in The Odeon, on the grounds of National Park Seminary, at Forest Glen, Md.

The Roadside Theater, out the Rockville pike a few miles beyond Bethesda, Md., enters the second week of "Grand Gesture," a new play never before accorded a public presentation, tonight in accordance with their avowed policy of offering each production for a fortnight's run.

A friendly and co-operative spirit is reflected in the Civic Theater group's determination to open its new plays on Tuesday nights hereafter, in order to avoid conflict with the Roadsiders' Monday inaugurals. It is hinted that the next play at The Odeon may be an original manuscript work by Margaret Hatfield, a member of the acting company, instead of "Men in White." If this comes to pass, it will open a week from tomorrow night.

Producers in a Sprint.

One of the heaviest production schedules on record is under way in the West Coast studios, according to wire advices hot from Hollywood.

The reason for this sudden anxiety to turn out an unprecedented number of feature pictures in the shortest possible time is said to be an acute shortage of available releases, due to two specific causes.

Chief blame for the present aridity of the usual founts of celluloid supply is laid at the door of the pernicious habit of using up features at twice the usual rate by presenting "double-feature" programs, or two feature films per bill, instead of one—a practice much more prevalent elsewhere than in the National Capital.

Politics Played Part.

A secondary cause of the present deficiency stems back to the recent threat of the State of California to place a practically prohibitive tax upon studio product. It will be recalled that a movement was started among the major producers to transplant their activities to Florida in case the inimical legislation went through. During this period of uncertainty, production was seriously curtailed to forestall heavy imposts of the confiscatory taxation.

But all that is beside the point that features are being rushed to the screen much more rapidly at just this time than ever before. For example, "Escapade," the current attraction at Loew's Palace, with William Powell and Luise Rainer in the stellar roles, was hurried to the screens of the country within a week after its West Coast preview.

The situation is so drastic, as a matter of last-minute report, that "The Virginian" has been rushed into reissue to help out as a stop-gap.

That production has lagged somewhere along the line is made clear by the fact that from January to June last year the studios supplied 210 features. The output during the same period this year dwindled—if that is what you would call it—to 185.

Quality Is Sustained.

The release charts, if summarized, would look something like this for this season: Paramount, 65; Warner Brothers, 60; Fox, 64; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 50; Universal, 42; Republic, 56; Radio, 50; Columbia, 40; United Artists, 24.

No fear need be entertained that quality will be sacrificed in the rush to achieve quantity, for among the forthcoming features included in the above enumeration are such subjects as Will Rogers in "Steamboat 'Round the Bend," renamed "Steamboat Bill," I believe, now in the cutting room; Harold Lloyd's "The Milky Way," "The Three Musketeers," "The Last Days of Pompeii," "The Crusades," Max Reinhardt's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," produced for Warner Brothers from the Shakespeare fantasy; "Romeo and Juliet," starring Norma Shearer, and Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities."

Speaking of "Escapade," as somebody was somewhere back there, something ought to be done about finding out, once and for all, what Mr. Powell's new leading woman's name really is. It has appeared variously in the local prints now as Ranier, Rainier and Rainer. There seems to be a fair concensus of opinion that the fascinating young Austrian actress' first name is Luise—not Louise. I have suspected from the outset that Rainer is correct, although if the charmingly ingenuous young woman lives up to the promise of her first picture, it probably will have to be spelled "Reigner."

"—And Bring the Kiddies."

"Kiddies' Day" will be observed each Monday and Friday from now until Labor Day on the Wilson Line steamers plying the Potomac and at Marshall Hall Park.

Round trip rates will be reduced for both adults and children on these days each week on the boats leaving Washington at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. At Marshall Hall Park, all rides will be half-fare on these days.

"Kiddies' Day" has been featured by the Wison Line for the past three years. This it is proving more popular than ever.

Incidentally, Potomac River traffic reached a new high on the Fourth of July, when all previous records were broken in number of passengers carried. During the moonlight cruise, passengers on the steamer enjoyed an unimpaired view of the aerial part of the fireworks display on the Monument Grounds in Washington.

It is pleasant to receive notes such as the one from Dorothy Dietz, a member of the Roadside Theater Company, last week, which was in part as follows: "Many thanks for your criticism of my Judy Bedell in 'Grand Gesture.' I do appreciate a criticism that gives me something definite to work on for correction. I am told that I was heard even in the last row yesterday. Your whole review was most kind and fair." Since our criticism of Miss Dietz was merely that she failed to give her lines sufficient volume on opening night, it is now a pleasure to assure Washington theatergoers that with this defect overcome, Miss Dietz will be found one of the most decorative and most enjoyable members of a cast that is doing well with a manuscript play written by an author who is 3,000 miles away. Miss Dietz's lines are among the most amusing in the three acts—hers and Paul Bradbury Walter's.

"Going Native" Again.

Gene Ford, manager of Loew's Fox Theater and director in charge of the third annual, all-Washington revue, "Going Native," to be staged at the Fox in August, is in New York today looking over scenery and costumes for the production.

Before leaving for New York last night, Mr. Ford made it plain that no definite selections have as yet been made for the cast, although many competent performers were turned up by the three nights of auditions held on the stage of the National Theater last Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights. Announcement of choices for the cast may be made later this week or early next.

A call has been issued for members of the chorus to report for rehearsal at the Joe Brown studios, 1210 G street, Saturday morning, July 20, at 10 o'clock. It is here that former chorus groups were rehearsed.

Must Prove Ages.

In issuing this call, Mr. Ford was further emphatic in declaring that all aspirants for a place in the line who are under 20 years of age must furnish documentary proof of their ages as stipulated in the District Child Labor law, which specifies that one must be 18 or over to appear in a public theatrical performance.

Among the proofs that will be accepted by those in charge are birth certificates, insurance policy in force one year or more, United States census records of 1920 or 1930, which can be secured at room 6028 Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce; baptismal record, family Bible record or baby-book record.

So now you know.

Those who have been of the opinion that Shakespeare would be a short-lived experiment on the screen will be interested to know that Jack L. Warner, in charge of Warner Brothers production at the Burbank studios on the West Coast, announced yesterday that his company would "waste no time" in arranging to bring four more of the Bard's plays to the screen. They are "Twelfth Night," "As You Like It," "A Comedy of Errors" and "The Merry Wives of Windsor." Marion Davies is being considered for "Twelfth Night," Josephine Hutchinson for "As You Like It," Jimmy Cagney for "A Comedy of Errors" and Guy Kibbee for Falstaff in "The Merry Wives." It is Warner's, of course, that has Max Reinhardt's film version of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" on the shelf ready for early fall release.

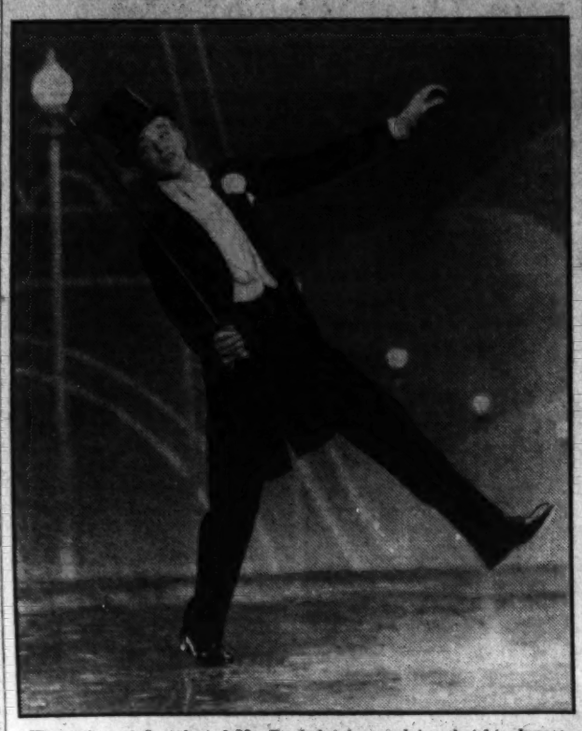
The Dancin'est Man in Pictures!



The agile and fleet-footed Mr. Fred Astaire explains that his dances, after all, are simplicity itself—if you just know how! It is merely a matter of equilibrium, says he, and proves it by keeping the right, or leverage, side of his body in a straight line. That Fred was going at top speed when this picture was snapped is evidenced by the fact that his hands, cane and left foot were too fast for the camera. The dance is one of whirling intricacies which he executes as a solo number in RKO-Radio's production of "Top Hat," coming along soon.

Dickinson Due To Become Aid Of Cummings

Assistant Secretary of Commerce Slated to Head Anti-Trust Division.

John Dickinson, who left a law professorship at the University of Pennsylvania to join the New Deal ranks in 1933 as Assistant Secretary of Commerce, will become Attorney General Cummings' assistant, in charge of the antitrust division.

Lacking confirmation, this report evoked considerable interest yesterday among officials in the Justice and Commerce Departments, although none chose to comment upon its authenticity. Dickinson himself declined either to confirm or deny it.

It was reliably understood that Attorney General Cummings sent Dickinson's nomination to President Roosevelt several days ago and that the 41-year-old lawyer, professor and author will take the place recently vacated by Harold M. Stephens to become assistant to the Attorney General.

To date the White House has made public no acknowledgment of the proposed transfer.

The passing of NRA, under which the anti-trust laws were partially suspended, lends added significance to Dickinson's pending appointment to head that branch of the Department of Justice which is responsible for prosecution of cases involving restraint of trade.

That the department will resume its former importance as the Federal Government's anti-trust law policeman was foreshadowed after dissolution of NRA, when the President charged that executive branch to cooperate with the Federal Trade Commission in such cases.

A native of Maryland, Dickinson has had extensive experience as a practising attorney and as a university instructor. At the age of 25 he was a doctor of philosophy. He holds degrees from Johns Hopkins, Harvard and Princeton universities.

From 1922 until 1925 Dickinson was a law partner in Los Angeles of William Gibbs McAdoo, junior Senator from California. Prior to his professorship at the University of Pennsylvania, he taught at Princeton, Radcliffe, Harvard, Amherst and other colleges and universities.

Four Hurt as Auto Is Hit by Trolley

Street Car Runs Through Open Switch.

Four persons were slightly injured yesterday when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a street car at Massachusetts avenue and North Capitol street.

The automobile was struck when the street car ran through an open switch at the intersection, police said.

The following were treated for minor cuts and bruises at Sibley Hospital: Miss Helen Gross, 38, 1865 Park road northwest; Miss Sarah Simons, 69, 1528 Corcoran street northwest; Mrs. A. P. Mulford, 70, 1865 Park road northwest, and Hunter P. Mulford, 40, 1528 Corcoran street northwest, driver of the car.

Joseph H. Higgs, 55, 747 Tenth street southeast, motorman on the street car, told police he did not realize he had run through the switch until he hit the automobile.

Negro's Cure-All Tonic Brings Him Ninety Days

A mysterious herb tonic—a cure for all ailments—resulted in a 90-day jail sentence yesterday for Robert Fink, colored, 64, 1003 O street northwest, with the advice from Judge Robert E. Mattingly that he take a bottle to jail with him. "It may ease your discomfort there," Judge Mattingly said.

Fink was arraigned in Police Court on a charge of practicing medicine without a license after the death of Dora Frye, colored, 1642 Kreamer street northeast. A coroner's report, however, showed the woman's death was due to cancer. Fink denied selling any of the medicine, claiming he only took it himself and supplied special friends with it.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Forgotten Art

Hollywood, July 5.

ONE night last week I went to the local Paramount theater—to see a flicker, of course—and there, on the stage, was a man talking to the audience.

I was surprised. I took a seat quickly. The theater lights were on, the man kept chattering, and the people would laugh occasionally, right out loud. This was something new.

The man on the stage wasn't Ronald Colman or Frederick March or William Powell, or any other movie star I had seen. He didn't hold a scenario in his hand to look at occasionally for his lines. True, he fumbled a line now and then, but he just kept on talking, and no one in the audience seemed to care; they were more concerned with listening and having fun.

The man on the stage kept moving about as he talked. He'd turn his back or profile to the audience, he'd walk to the wings or right down to the footlights and say a few words to the orchestra leader.

There wasn't a camera. There wasn't a script girl. There wasn't a makeup man who, every so often, walked up to the performer and patted his face with a powder puff so the makeup would be perfect. There wasn't a director sitting in a chair to stop the proceedings and ask how it was for sound. The man on the stage didn't keep doing the same thing over and over. He was now talking directly to the large audience, as if he knew each one personally. He wasn't afraid of the audience or annoyed by them. He didn't ask an assistant director to tell the audience to leave. I realized that I wasn't watching a picture being filmed.

• • • •

THIS was something new. I turned to the bearded man sitting next to me and asked: "What's going on?"

"That's George Jessel making a personal appearance," he said, and then he went back to laughing. A minute later, the bearded man added: "They used to call it vaudeville. We used to get eight acts of it and . . ." But I didn't hear the rest, for the orchestra was playing bow music loudly and the audience was applauding.

I didn't wait to see the picture I had come to see. I went backstage to visit this George Jessel. His dressing room was not like the dressing rooms I had seen in motion pictures.

• • • •

The room was small, smaller than Constance Bennett's portable dressing room. The room was stuffy, and there were a few cans of grease paint on a green shelf, which was used as a table. There were two dirty towels in view, and three cane bottom chairs, which didn't appear too solid.

"Sit down," said Jessel. There were two guys in the room who looked like characters who used to be seen in the corner of a speakeasy. One of the guys poked a chair under me.

"Take it will you, Sam," Jessel said to one of the two guys. "I don't feel like running downstairs." Sam and the old man went out.

JESSEL started to talk to me, and he spoke exactly as he had to the audience. He explained that he was doing this because he needed some quick cash. He explained who the two fellows in the room were. They were companions to keep him from being lonely. They did odd jobs for him, such as getting checks cashed, passing friends into the theater, tending to the railroad tickets, etc. When he did a sketch on the stage they went on, too, for they were really actors out of work.

The guy who went to answer the phone returned. "It was another sob story," he told Jessel. "I almost hate to walk out of the theater," said Jessel, "you get so many touches. And from fellows who were pretty big. That's what makes it sad."

But Jessel needed another pair of pants. He wanted a pair of cream-colored flannels so he would look classy on the stage. "Have you got ten bucks with you until I see the manager?" he asked Sam. We all walked out of the dressing room.

The stage door man with the grease on his suit, said: "Don't get lost. You go on again at 10:10." Jessel was in the little theatre alley leading to the street. A man stopped him. "Have you got another fin?" Jessel said to Sam. He handed it to the man.

I looked at the stage door man. The stage was empty and dark. The picture was on. He was listening to the voices from the sound box back of the screen. I was happy that I had bumped into vaudeville again. I had forgotten about it, just like every one.

Police Question Shooting Suspect

William H. Platt Held in Mullen Case.

Continuing their investigation of Friday's "mistake" shooting, in which George (Bricktop) Mullen, 28, 400 block of Sixth street northwest, was fatally wounded, police last night questioned William H. Platt, 27, 1000 block of Eighth street northwest, alleged to have fired the shot.

According to investigators, Platt reputedly fired at Mullen's companion—identified only as a man named Ross. The shooting followed a Fourth of July argument. Ross, police reported, threw a firecracker dangerously near Mrs. Platt.

The next day Platt saw Mullen and Ross walking on the street. He allegedly fired at Ross, but the bullet struck Mullen, police said. The wounded man died a few hours later.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald set tomorrow as the date for an inquest.

Inquiry Continues In Bather's Death

By the Associated Press.

Fort Smith, Ark., July 8.—A coroner's jury sitting in adjoining Crawford County today declined to fix responsibility in the death of Mary Isabel Mahar, 14, on a Fourth of July swimming party.

The case went to county authorities for further investigation on a finding of "death at the hands of a person or persons unknown" after the taking of testimony from other guests in the party.

Her neck broken, Miss Mahar's body, clad only in undergarments, was found Saturday in Clear Creek.

Physicians said she had been attacked.

Trammell was held for the outcome of today's inquest by Prosecuting Attorney Finis F. Batchelor, who said the young man "told officers a half dozen conflicting stories."

Drunk Cases Off 100% In District Police Court

Intoxication cases dropped 100 per cent in Police Court yesterday. Only 100 "drunks" were arraigned before Judge Ralph Given as against 200 for Monday of last week.

Judge Given attributed the decrease to his recent campaign to "discourage" repeaters. During the last week, he said, nearly 100 former offenders were sentenced to 90 days in jail.

Foxx's Homer, Single Give American All-Stars 4-1 Victory

With Shirley Povich

Cleveland, July 8.

NATIONAL LEAGUE partisans tonight are blaming the selfishness of the league's managers for the third straight all-star game defeat suffered today.

They didn't keep the faith, reports have it, and there are concrete indications that there is justice in the complaint. The squawks revolve about the National League's pitching arrangements for the game which resulted in the assignment of the Cardinals' Bill Walker to pitch the opening innings.

POVICH.

Frankie Frisch, the National League's manager, does not come into the argument with clean hands. He is said to be blaming Manager Bill Terry, of the Giants, for Terry's failure to withhold Carl Hubbell from duty against the Dodgers yesterday and thus have him available for today's all-star game. But Terry is well fortified with a stinging reply.

It was Frisch who, unwilling to risk the Cardinals' chances in the pennant race, sent Dizzy Dean into the game against the Cincinnati Reds yesterday and thus prompted Charley Dressen, manager of the Reds, to counter with Paul Derringer, another who had been counted upon by Frisch to figure mightily in today's game here. If Frisch could use Dean, Dressen reasoned, then he was not bound to withhold Derringer for all-star duty.

TERRY pointed out before the game today that even though he had worked Hubbell against the Dodgers, he still had available for the all-star game Hal Schumacher, his outstanding pitcher. The Giants' manager inferred that he was not bound to provide more than one pitcher for the all-star line-up, particularly when that pitcher was the league's best.

Thus it was that Frisch was forced to call upon the left-handed Bill Walker, who had not pitched a complete game since May 18. That he elected Walker to start the game instead of Schumacher is quite beside the point, being a question of managerial judgment, but the fact remains that he was forced to use as two of his pitchers Dizzy Dean and Derringer, who had seen long service the day before.

The National Leaguers' defeat is directly attributable to Walker's pitching. He was in the box in those first two innings when the American Leaguers piled up their winning 3-run margin. In the opposite dugout, Mickey Cochrane's job was infinitely easier; he had at his command not only Gomez and Harder, but Tommy Bridges and Schoolboy Rowe, all of whom had had sufficient rest.

Baseball men easily recall the grand manner in which Manager Walter Johnson aided the American Leaguers to win last year's game by withholding Mel Harder from duty for several days before the battle. Thus it was, with sufficient rest, that Harder was able to outpitch the brilliant Carl Hubbell and ultimately swing the victory to the American Leaguers.

THE National Leaguers, with their fancy uniforms, were literally the most colorful team today. Compared with the sober dress of the American Leaguers, there was the pink visors of the Braves, the riotous red of the Cardinals, the blue trimmings of the Cubs, and the red, gray and green stockings of the Giants.

The American League's board of strategy outnumbered the Nationals' in the pregame conference with the umpires anent the ground rules. Bill Terry alone represented Frisch in the parley at the plate, but Manager Mickey Cochrane was flanked by Rogers Hornsby and Del Baker.

The prime favorite with the 69,812 in the stands was Joe Vosmik, the home-town sandlot product of the Indians who elicited a cheer every time he moved a muscle and who finally made a hit in the fifth inning.

IT was okay with Mickey Cochrane if Lefty Gomez wanted to pitch all of the first six innings. It would have been okay with Cochrane if Gomez had pitched the entire game. The Tigers are fighting the Yanks for the pennant, you see, and if Gomez has any good games in his system, Cochrane would prefer him to waste them on the National Leaguers.

Today's dream game was strangely devoid of fielding thrills. It was not until the eighth inning that anything like a sensational play was offered the 69,812. And then the Giants' Joe Moore figuratively refunded the price of admission by sprinting far, far across the running track in right center field and pulling down the hardest blow of the ball game to rob Lou Gehrig of a home run, no less.

Great Players Thick as Flies As All-Star Nines Have Show

By Paul Gallico,

A Special Correspondent.

CLEVELAND, July 8.—This all-star ball game in Municipal Stadium today has already been described as a pitchers' hell. It is by the same token a managers' paradise. There is enough talent sitting on the benches to make up a couple of winning ball clubs. It must be nice to find yourself in a spot where you need a pinch hitter and instead of worrying over which one of your bums and utility men you can send to the plate, you can reach into your dugout blindfolded and come up with somebody like Paul Waner.

True, Paolo didn't do anything when Manager Frisch sent him in for Schumacher in the seventh inning but that isn't the point. For once, two managers, Frisch and Cochrane, were millionaires of material.

There was, as a matter of fact, so much material, both on the field and on the benches that one wished they would play a double-header instead of a single game. It would be a fairer test for both leagues. There were enough pitchers, and when a crowd of 70,000 pay close to a hundred thousand dollars for the pure love of good baseball, why a single game seems all too short. I could look at baseball like this for 12 hours, and so could the crowd.

Deans Mixed Greeting.

The National League sent in a party by the name of J. Dean to pitch the last two innings of the game. The yell that went up from the crowd must have stirred the waters of adjacent Lake Erie. It wasn't al' approval by any means. There was the low sinister sounds of disapproval backing up the cheers. It was a grand crowd for noise. The two sides of the horseshoe seemed to retain sound and bounce it back and forth rather than getting rid of it. When J. Dean walked Jimmy Foxx the audience liked to have raised the steel roof over their heads. There wasn't as much noise when he struck out Bob Johnson. Poor Diz. His popularity is on the wane. The crowd wants to see him humiliated.

The battle was waged in the biggest ball yard ever seen. The two foul lines end at 320 feet each and the center-field fence must be more than 450-feet from the plate. Lou Gehrig pasted one to right center that must have traveled more than 400-feet, but an outfielder was standing under it with his pocket open waiting for it to drop in. Of course, this makes for better baseball and discourages pop-fly home runs. But we are'nt used to it and it seems strange to see an outfield that really taxes the strength of a long hitter. There is only one gentleman present capable of doing any business with that long stretch in right center, and he was sitting in the stands talking to his wife, Mrs. Ruth!

Canadian Flies Bother.

Those little green flies that come over from Canada and which all but ruined the Schmeling-Stribling fight held in this same vast arena were around again today, falling into the typewriter keys and down people's necks. Jo Jo Moore had

Bluege in 1 Inning; Myer Fails to Play

By a Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, July 8.—Manager Mickey Cochrane, of the American League All-Stars, paid a tribute to the defensive ability of Ossie Bluege today, but Buddy Myer, the Nats' other contribution to the All-Star squad, sat the game out.

Cochrane sent the veteran Bluege to third base to replace Jimmy Foxx as a precautionary measure in the ninth inning with the Americans enjoying a 4-1 lead. Bluege, however, did not have a fielding chance.

With the score always close, Cochrane found no cause to insert Myer at second base in view of Charley Gehringer's own defensive ability and his potential long-distance hitting.

Keeping company with Myer on the American's bench were such as Outfielder Sammy West, of the Browns; Catcher Rick Ferrell, of the Red Sox; Pitchers Schoolboy Rowe and Tommy Bridges, of the Tigers, and Cochrane, himself.

Nationals Are Unable to Overcome Early Lead; Lose Third Time.

By Shirley Povich,

A Staff Correspondent.

CLEVELAND, July 8.—Each a star in a diamond setting, the pick of the American and National League ball players met in combat today in Cleveland's huge amphitheater on the slopes of Lake Erie and the rarest jewel of them all was Jimmy Foxx.

Bare-armed, brawny-armed Jimmy Foxx was the author of the American League's 4-1 triumph over the National—home-run king again for a day. For it was his big bat, booming violently in the first inning and speaking with authority again in the fifth, that lifted his teammates to victory.

Three of the American League's four runs Jimmy Foxx produced, against the best pitching that Manager Frankie Frisch could muster from the National League, and it was the praises of Jimmy Foxx that baseball's third largest crowd in history, 69,812, was voicing as it filed from the huge inclosure.

Nationals Get Four Hits.

This, the third straight defeat for the National League in the three annual all-star games, was their most ignominious. Only four hits did Lefty Gomez and Mel Harder yield to an array of National League hitters, which, on paper, contained all the elements of a pitcher's nightmare. And two of those hits were not truly legitimate.

The 4-to-1 lead that Foxx had amassed for Gomez, the slender Yankee pitcher, was turned over to Harder, of the Cleveland staff, for safekeeping in the seventh inning, and it might just as well been placed under lock and key for all the liberties that Harder permitted. Three hits the National Leaguers had made off Gomez in those first six innings. Against Harder in the last three innings their lot was a tainted double by Jimmy Wilson with one out.

The monster crowd that thronged the far-flung Municipal Stadium blotted out all seats except the empty patches in the center field bleachers and numbered among them were enough notables to pack a Who's Who. Mayors were a dime a dozen, Governors quoted at only a bit more. Actors, fighters and Babe Ruth drew scant attention.

Cream of the Crop.

On the field were the pick of the players' crop in the two big leagues, and on the bench was enough talent to form a pennant-winning club in either circuit. Here were two teams without a visible weakness and after simple flag-raising ceremonies, the 69,812 settled back for the unfolding of what the sportswriters have

All-Star Crowd Fails to Set Record

69,812 See Cleveland Tilt but Bleachers Are Unfilled.

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, July 8.—The fan from New York took off his coat, ordered a bottle of pop and began yelling as loudly as his neighbor from Colorado. They were part of the 69,812 baseball bugs that attended the all-star classic in Cleveland Stadium today.

It was one of the world's greatest assemblies of ball fans, but the 69,812 paid attendance failed to break the all-time record for baseball.

The fans from New York and Colorado and elsewhere bought the reserved seat tickets, but the turnout of Clevelanders was below expectations. Billy Evans, general manager of the Cleveland Indians, said a disappointing sale of bleacher seats blasted his hopes of bettering the all-time attendance mark.

A double-header between the Yankees and Athletics on September 9, 1928, drew 85,265 at Yankee Stadium, an attendance generally recognized as the world's greatest, although the paid admissions were only slightly over 70,000.

Topped in Cleveland.

The first all-star game at Chicago in 1933 drew 49,000 fans, while at the New York Polo Grounds last year 48,363 saw the event.

Every box and reserved seat at today's game was sold. Evans said, but instead of 10,000 bleacherites only 3,108 appeared.

"The fellows usually taking the 55-cent seats splurged today and spent $1.35 to sit in another section 20 feet away from the sun seats," was Evans' explanation.

Gross receipts totaled $93,692. Evans reported, of which about $12,000 will be paid in Government and State taxes and $15,000 for expenses. A large share of the balance goes to the ball players' protective fund.

Fans Warm Up.

Jimmy Foxx's home run in the first inning took the crowd by surprise, but by the fifth inning the spectators had loosened up. Foxx's single in the fifth, scoring Vosmik, brought a wild ovation.

Kenesaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, and most of the other great names in the game were there. So was Jack Bowers, 9, who never had seen a game, and Alex May, a newsboy who waited 17½ hours outside the gates for a ticket. It was decidedly a pro-American League crowd, but the National had thousands of supporters.

Dizzy Dean's appearance on the mound in the eighth set the mob off in a frenzy of boos and cheers. A considerable portion of the audience had never seen "the great one" in action before.

"What would the old-timers have said if they could have seen a baseball game played before 70,000 persons?" asked a fan from Pennsylvania.

Helen Jacobs Is Disappointed Over Losing, Not Discouraged

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, July 8.—Disappointed? Well, yes; discouraged? Emphatically no.

That was Helen Hull Jacobs's frame of mind today as she returned from a week-end of rest in the country following her defeat by Helen Wills Moody in the Wimbledon All-England Singles Tennis championship last Saturday.

"After all," she said, "since Helen and I began playing each other I've come up from 125 points behind to within a point of winning. Maybe I'll win the next time."

May Clash in August.

When and where "the next time" will take place is conjectural. It may occur in the U. S. championships at Forest Hills late next month or not again for another year until the 1936 Wimbledon tournament.

There's nothing to a report in a London daily that she will not play at Wimbledon again.

"I might have felt like that when the match ended last Saturday. It would be foolish to say I was not disappointed after coming so close to winning, but I feel a whole lot better now and I know I'll be back at Wimbledon next year if it is at all possible."

The entire British continental press helped Miss Jacobs forget her defeat quickly. Their match was hailed as the greatest between women players.

"I could not remain discouraged long," she said, "after reading the beautiful things they said about us and getting so many nice messages from America. They seem to make it all worth while."

She's anxious for another contest with Mrs. Moody, but definitely stated she would not consider a $25,000 proposition made for a match on the Pacific Coast.

Remain for Play.

"A match like that would not mean anything to me and I'm sure Helen feels the same way about it," she said.

Miss Jacobs will remain in England for the International Davis Cup matches and then return to the United States for the Wightman Cup matches, in which she will play with Mrs. Moody as a teammate.

Mrs. Moody likewise spent the week-end in the country. She returned to town today for a garden party given in her honor by Lady Crossfield. The seven-times winner of the Wimbledon title had a long talk with the Duchess of York.

Cochrane Is Jubilant, Frisch Melancholy, Blames Hurlers

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, July 8. — They were slapping backs in the American League dressing room after today's all-star game, but over in the National loop's shower room they were slapping back.

Only a little of the senior circuit players' chagrin over their third straight defeat in the all-star encounter was offset by the fact their efforts helped place $93,692.80 more in the fund which will be used to aid unfortunate baseball players.

Mickey Cochrane, whose Detroit Tigers lost the world series last year to St. Louis, was jubilant as his players, recruited from every club in the loop, crowded around to shake his hand.

"We got back at 'em for you," was Jimmie Foxx's greeting. It was Jimmie's long home run in the first inning, with Lou Gehrig of the Yanks on base, which gave the American Leaguers their victory.

"What was it you hit?" Mickey asked Foxx.

"A curve," was the reply. "They will try to hook that three-and-two ball, these National Leaguers."

Frankie Frisch, skipper of the Cards, who led the Nationals into the all-star fray, was rather melancholy about it all but placed the blame on his pitchers.

"Practically all of them have been working hard lately and three of the boys we had to rely on pitched nine innings yesterday. The result was they just didn't do their stuff. We had a couple of chances to win the game, with a hit in the right place, but Gomez and Harder bore down and we didn't get 'em."

The turning point of the game, according to Frisch's estimate, came almost before the contest was under way.

"Foxx just about wrecked the game with that homer in the first. The turning point came with only two out in the first inning and you can't win 'em much quicker than that."

Asked why he chose Walker, of Little Plans Change In Links Technique

Will Change Style Before Entering Amateur.

By the Associated Press.

London, July 8.—W. Lawson Little, jr., British and American amateur golf champion, plans to alter drastically his game before competing in the United States Amateur at Cleveland in September, he said today.

Immediately upon his return to the United States the Californian, disappointed with his showing in the recent British open, plans to place himself in the hands of Tommy Armour, veteran Chicago professional, in an effort to change his back swing to get his clubhead open at the top instead of closed, as at present.

"I realize I am taking a big chance at this stage of my career," said Little, "but I believe Armour can do it. I am willing to sacrifice distance off the tees to get accuracy."

Danno Defeats Little Wolf In 28:23

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, July 8.—Danno O'Mahoney, from County Cork, Ireland, generally recognized as world's wrestling champion, made a successful defense of his title claims tonight when he threw Chief Little Wolf, Navajo Indian from Trinidad, Colo., in 28 minutes 23 seconds of their scheduled finish match.

The mild-looking Irishman and the wild-looking Indian banged each other about with an exotic assortment of orthodox and extra-curricular grips until the bout was nearly half an hour old. Then the Irishman clipped the Indian with a neat forearm smash which made the Chief's nose bleed.

The sight of blood apparently was more than the Indian brave could bear, for in a trice O'Mahoney had him down and pinned the Redskin's shoulders to the mat.

A crowd of not more than 25,000—less than half the turnout expected—cut loose with a tremendous roar five minutes after the bout started when O'Mahoney seized the Indian by the wrist, apparently in preparation for applying his highly publicized "Irish Whip." But the grip was just another which failed. So did the "Indian Death Grip," fabled bone-crusher of the Navajo's repertoire, which was the next item of the show.

The boys settled down to their customary club routine and divided their time between showing some action for the benefit of the cash customers, and in kidding each other and the ringside battery of cameramen.

The Chief didn't like his press.

"You take pictures when I'm down," he complained, "Why don't you take some when I'm on top?"

A couple of minutes later he steered his opponent over near the cameramen, flopped Danno to the deck, and said, "all right boys, go ahead but take your time. I'll hold him till you give the word."

Losing Mates Hit Frisch's Strategy

Feel Pilot Should Have Started Schumacher and Not Walker.

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

CLEVELAND, July 8.—Frankie Frisch, nonplaying pilot of the National League all-stars, was the victim of plenty of second-guessing tonight in the camp of the losers, all because Frankie's last-minute pitching strategy did not work, while a late switch by Mickey Cochrane, leader of the Americans, did.

Frisch sharply defended his decision to start Lefty Bill Walker of his own Cardinals instead of the brilliant Hal Schumacher, ace of the New York Giants, but National Leaguers—including a number of the all-stars—felt it was all a mistake and that the result might have been different with "Prince Hal" doing his "sinker ball" stuff from the outset.

It might have been, but it probably wouldn't, unless Schumacher had been pitching the route. The rest of the National League staff, including Paul Derringer and Dizzy Dean, looked arm-weary, while Carl Hubbell, a hero of the 1934 game, didn't appear at all. Schumacher displayed plenty of stuff during the four innings he worked, fanning five, but it was too late to be of much good, particularly as the big hitters of the National League looked bad in the pinches against Lefty Gomez and Mel Harder.

Gomez, who was given the starting assignment in a surprise move just as Harder went out to warm up, received credit for his second all-star victory. The Yankee ace was the winning pitcher in 1933. Harder was the victor last year and it looks like a good idea for the Americans to sign them up for 1936, when the all-star show probably will be staged in Boston.

There were no yells for big Hank Greenberg, Detroit's great Jewish first baseman and the current slugging king of the majors, inasmuch as the Americans finished on top, but Lou Gehrig failed to get a hit in the All-Star bout for the third straight year. The Yankee first-sacker is at the foot of the batting class in the annual frolic, but he had the distinction of hitting the longest drive of today's game. It was just another long fly ball in the huge Cleveland stadium, but it traveled fully 450 feet, to the running track in deep right center, where Joe Moore dragged it down on the gallop. On three other trips to the plate Gehrig walked once and failed to get the ball out of the infield in two tries.

The American Leaguers have produced only two more runs in three all-star games, but they were useful. Babe Ruth, a press box spectator today, provided the winning margin with the first round-tripper at Chicago in 1933. Jimmie Foxx's big blow today also furnished the winning run. Frankie Frisch, who hit in each of the previous two all-star contests, didn't play this afternoon, and Joe Medwick, who hit one last year at the Polo Grounds, didn't get so much as a single.

Below Zero Is Second in Feature

By the Associated Press.

EMPIRE CITY, N. Y., July 8.—Victor Emanuel's fleet black filly, Miss Merriment, made merry with a meritorious field of sprinters in the Nyack purse here today. Carrying a mere 105 pounds, the High Time miss broke on top and outran her opposition to win by five lengths, giving Jockey Bobby Jones a double and favorite players their second straight success at odds of 9 to 10.

C. H. Knebelkamp's Below Zero, another black filly gifted with high speed, held on to save the place by a length and a half. William Ziegler, jr.'s Bonanza just got up to nose out G. D. Widener's Chicstraw for the show. Miss Merriment ran the short six furlongs in 1:08 1-5, just two-fifths of a second slower than the track record.

No Anxious Moments.

Miss Merriment never gave her backers an anxious moment, once she shot into the van at the break. She had so much speed that she was able to leave as fast a rival as Below Zero several lengths behind before the field had gone many strides. Chicstraw, after a long absence from competition, showed good speed to the stretch, holding close to Below Zero. The latter held onto the end to thwart the belated bid of Bonanza.

A. A. Baroni, Western horseman whose Top Row won the Empire City—Handicap Saturday, saddled Ann O'Ruley for his wife in the fifth event and the Man o' War filly made good under Jockey J. Longden.

Malloy Ties Burton With 144 Total

CLAUDE RIPPY, the transplanted North Carolinian, was up to his old tricks yesterday at Rock Creek's course. After taking a wobbly 75 in his morning round, the ranking District municipal golfer regained his delicate, masterful touch with the irons, and banged out par-leveling 68 to take the lead at the halfway mark of the 72-hole National Public Links sectional trials.

Rippy's 143 found him one stroke in front of George Maloy, the little red-haired flash, and Bobby Burton, bespectacled sharpshooter, both of whom are former municipal qualifiers.

Malloy, 1932 District public links king, scored rounds of 73 and 71, while Burton, in a comeback as brilliant as that of Rippy's, fired a 68 on his second 18-hole trip after taking a dismal 76 in the morning.

Oliveri Is Fourth.

In fourth place, four shots behind Malloy and Burton, came chubby-faced Andy Oliveri, 18-year-old Roosevelt High School golf star, who paced the 61 starters with a glistening morning score of 71, only to falter with a 77.

The thrice former District champion, Bradley (Ted) Burrows, seeking to win back the glory that once was his, trailed the leader, Rippy, by six strokes by virtue of his 78-71—149. The 215-pound poultryman, who hasn't played more than two full rounds this season, did himself proud with a 36-35—71, rallying after encountering trouble on the first 18-hole jaunt.

Burrows played with Malloy and Rippy.

Next in line came Ben Kong, the former Hawaiian champion, a law student at George Washington University, who posted a brace of 75's for 150. Kong found out that his seven birdies were quite helpful.

Stolark, Sharkey Tied.

Locked with scores of 151 were Eddie Stolark, who had 78-73, and 15-year-old Buddy Sharkey, who blasted out a 74 in the morning.

Don O'Bryan, former Louisville champion, tied at 153 with Bob Leapley, Joe Micker and Bill Wilhelm. O'Bryan shot a 73 on the last 18. In the morning he got tangled up in the woods on the 451-yard fifteenth and took ten strokes. Micker fired a 73 in the morning, and his best in the afternoon was an 80.

The day's chief casualties were Harold Bowers, former Anacostia champion, and Herman Allen, who virtually blasted their chances with ragged rounds. Bowers had 84-79—163, and Allen, 81-80—161.

Rippy looked like a world beater until he struck the thirty-third hole, the same hole on which O'Bryan made his 10. Up to that point Rippy was one under par for the afternoon round. He started off with a birdie, deuced the third, just missed his eagle on the eighth, and rounded the turn in 34, even par.

Legion Team Takes Interstate Pennant

Celanese Loses to Miss Chance for Tie.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., July 8.—The Interstate Baseball League's first-half schedule ended yesterday. The American Legion clinched the championship by defeating Potomac Edison at Community Park, 3-2. It would have been possible for the Celanese A. A. tossers to have finished even with the Legion by downing Centerville yesterday, but Corriganville could not furnish an eligible club against the Legion and the game to go an exhibition affair.

Earl V. Diehl, manager of the Corriganville club so far this season, has resigned, claiming officials failed to approve of his efforts to rebuild the team for the second-half race. It is expected that Lloyd Christner, veteran infielder, will be appointed to handle the club for the remainder of the season. Diehl had imported four star players from the faster Mather, Pa., team, one of the strongest in the Fayette-Greene County sector of Pennsylvania, but they were not signed in time to be eligible for yesterday's game. They are Lee Diehl, former Cumberland Colt and Hagerstown Hub; Carl Doney, Claude Artis, catcher, and Charles Coles, pitcher.

Harrisonburg Nips Orange Team, 4-3

Early Runs Bring Valley League Victory.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Orange, Va., July 8.—Uprisings in the second and third innings against Goode, visiting hurler, that netted four runs, enabled Orange to down Harrisonburg here, 4 to 3. Smith, on the mound for the locals, allowed but five hits, one less than his opponent, but kept them well scattered until the seventh, when three runs crossed in two runs. Tilsdale, relieving him, held the Valley boys hitless for the remainder of the game. Features of the game were the defensive work of Kline, Orange outfielder, and Haney, local shortstop. Orange goes to Harrisonburg Tuesday night.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., July 7.—Well in front of the nearest contender, the Blairton baseball club was formally declared the winner of the first half in the Bi-County Industrial League at a meeting of the league officials and team representatives here last night.

Millville was close on Blairton's heels. Bakerton, Martinsburg Standard and Berkeley followed in order named.

Adoption of the second half schedule was deferred owing to Martinsburg withdrawing from the league. An entirely new schedule will be drawn. All Wednesday games will be eliminated from the schedule with the exception of those games in which Bakerton will play. Bakerton is opposed to Sunday ball, necessitating the Wednesday games.

HARRISONBURG, Va., July 8.—Charlottesville emphasized that it is to be heard from in Valley League circles yesterday by soundly trouncing the Culpeper Champions to climb within one game of the lead.

During the past week the fans had watched the fight between Culpeper and Front Royal for the first place honors and overlooked the onward march of the University City lads who have taken seven out of their last eight games.

Front Royal, with eight straight victories, was halted by Harrisonburg and then handed a double defeat by Heurich on the Fourth of July to give Culpeper the lead. The champions further asserted their superiority with a stunning 11 to 0 defeat over the All-Stars Saturday. Culpeper took a doubleheader from Harrisonburg on the Fourth of July which placed them a half game in the lead.

Then Charlottesville came along to batter everything Culpeper had to offer and forced the Champions to the point of placing Walter Beall in the outfield as the game went on.

Heurich at .500 Mark.

Heurich has climbed to the halfway point of seven victories and as many defeats. Harrisonburg tops the second division but the runners-up for the title last season have lost all hope after dropping the twin bill to Culpeper and an unexpected setback to the Orange tail-enders. Waynesboro, Staunton, and Orange appear out of the picture for first-half honors. The first half ends July 21.

This week's play is bound to make considerable difference among the three contenders. Charlottesville meets Front Royal Saturday and engages Culpeper in a doubleheader Sunday.

Hitting honors for the week go to Bud Metheny, Culpeper outfielder. He cracked out two home runs and a triple in his first night game at Harrisonburg and then added another circuit clout in the Front Royal game. A scout of the New York Yankees watched the doubleheader at Harrisonburg and fans believe he has his eye on Metheny.

When Waynesboro played here Saturday night it brought together the two playing survivors of the Harrisonburg champions of 1923—Leavel, Harrisonburg first baseman, and Hulvey, Waynesboro third sacker. They are the only players now in action of the original valley loop. Incidentally, Floyd Baker, the Harrisonburg short stop, was only 5 years old when Hulvey was throwing them to Leavel 12 years ago.

The busy schedule for this week follows: Tuesday—Orange at Harrisonburg.
Wednesday—Heurich at Staunton, Culpeper at Waynesboro.

Frederick's 8-Run Rally Beats Eagles

Alexandrians Lose Game to Hustlers, 10-8.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., July 8.—One big inning—the third—when eight runs were scored, enabled Frederick Hustlers, formerly Blue Ridge League semi-professional players, to defeat Alexandria (Va.) Eagles before a large crowd at McCurdy Field, 10 to 8. Don Rice started on the mound for Frederick and held Alexandria hitless until the sixth frame, when two errors, a fielder's choice, two singles and a triple by Roy counted for five runs. One more was added in the eighth and two in the ninth.

Morgan lost his balance in the third when three passes, singles by Himes, Angleberger and Rice and doubles by Hartman and Six put over eight markers. He then settled down until the seventh when Angleberger poled a long home run to left field. A single by Hoffman and a triple by Himes gave Frederick one more run in the eighth session. Alexandria started a rally in the ninth, but was stopped by Fraley, who relieved Rice in the box.

FREDERICK, Md., July 8.—Middletown downed Brunswick, 10 to 9; Union Bridge took the measure of Woodsboro, 10 to 9; New Windsor defeated Emmitsburg, 10 to 1, and Taneytown set back Thurmont, 12 to 5, in week-end county league games.

Middletown's victory over Brunswick put the former in first place in the pennant race. It was the first defeat of the season for the Railroaders. Middletown took the lead in the fifth inning by scoring three runs and held it until the eighth when Brunswick rallied and scored four runs. Middletown came back in the ninth with two runs.

Woodsboro and Union Bridge battled for 14 innings in one of the hardest-fought games ever witnessed at Union Bridge. Eaves knotted the count for Woodsboro with a home run in the eighth inning, after which neither side scored until the thirteenth, when singles by Stout, Eaves and Fogle, double by Art Crum and a circuit blow by Henry Crum gave Woodsboro four runs. Union Bridge came back in the last half of the same inning and tied the score, and Union Bridge won in the fourteenth on an error by Stout, allowing Behrens to reach second, and an error by Eaves, who dropped Bankard's long fly.

Taneytown Rallies.

Taneytown marred "Johnny Creager Day" at Thurmont by defeating the Mountaineers largely through errors. The game was close until the eighth inning when, with one down, the Carroll County team developed a batting rally that counted for seven runs.

New Windsor broke up a pitchers' battle between Shilling and Mondorff in the fifth inning by scoring six runs on seven singles and an error in the game with Emmitsburg.

Leading Nines Tied In County League

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., July 8.—The Blue Sox and Sharpsburg are tied for the lead in the Washington County Baseball League by virtue of victories yesterday.

The Blue Sox made it two straight victories in the second half of the season, when they defeated Williamsport, 5 to 3. Lushbaugh pitched brilliantly for the winners, except for a streak of wildness in the third inning, when he walked three batters, Williamsport scoring all of its runs that round.

Sharpsburg won its second game, by defeating the Eagles of this city, 10 to 7. An early lead enabled Sharpsburg to win after Gross blew up in the eighth and the Eagles scored six runs before Brashears checked the rally.

The Chevies turned in a victory in their first game in the second half at the expense of the Cabbies, 3 to 1, in a pitching duel between Tolbert, the winner and E. Springer.

The Antietams won from the Woodmen, 16 to 5, featured by a 7-run rally in the third, while Boonsboro turned the tables on Mount Briar to win, 11 to 2, behind the excellent pitching of Alexander.

Hancock was idle yesterday.

Softball Loop Started.

Martinsburg, W. Va., July 7.—A softball league, with eight teams entered, representing as many church schools here, will be put under way tomorrow with first games. Twenty-eight games will be played and the split-season plan will be followed.

Let's Go Fishing . . .

By M. W. Meier.

A SOUTHEASTER still made the Chesapeake a dreary place to fish on yesterday. Rain fell and the sky was lead-colored as far as the eye could see. During Sunday night it was rough and uncomfortable. Yesterday the waves were not so high but sport fishing had ceased to be a pleasure. One dreamt of wood fires, good books and stiff highballs.

For days, we have been trying to locate blues in the upper bay. We have gone here and there, without success. Croakers no longer interest us, but even if they did we could not hope to catch many during this blow. We also note that they are running small right now unless one goes below Hooper's Light. They seem to average between two and three pounds.

The fish we have caught are bursting full with tiny clams. Shrimp is still a fair bait but peeler crabs are producing more fish and strikes. It really isn't even a strike. Rather, the fish nibble and you have to yank quick to hook them.

The ocean probably is worst right now, but will change to Ocean City for a few days—and see what the blues and channel bass are doing on the Atlantic.

Who Lost a Reel?

We put in to Solomons Island yesterday morning and had a chat with Capt. Preston Lore, of the good ship Kingfish. He recounted a yarn that staggers belief.

Sunday night he was fishing with a party from Washington below Cedar Point Light. The waves were running high and a stiff wind was blowing. His anchor failed to hook into the bottom and the boat drifted for a mile or two despite good flukes.

Puzzled, he finally hauled it in only to find that one of his flukes was embedded into the handle side of a brand-new saltwater reel! The handle was gone, knocked off, undoubtedly, when the anchor hit the bottom. A rod probably was attached but in the process of drifting this had been ground off.

There was a heavy green line attached to the reel—a line strong enough to have held a whale. If you lost such an outfit you might communicate with Capt. Lore. However, it isn't any good any more, save as a curiosity.

Charles Town Racing Funds Are Litigated

Charles Town, W. Va., July 8.—A controversy over authority within the Shenandoah Jockey Club here took a new turn yesterday when two members of the board of directors of the club, Attorney George Beltzhoover and Sheriff G. K. Wysong, of Charles Town, went to Cacapon River, where Circuit Judge D. H. Rodgers is on a fishing vacation, and asked a restraining order upon expenditure of funds in the club treasury.

Manager Al Boyles, also member of the board of directors, opposed the restraining order.

Judge Rodgers heard the arguments in his fishing clothes, and at the conclusion an agreement was reached among the group, under which no action will be taken until July 20, when the case will be heard at Martinsburg in a special term of court.

Bituminous Coal Output Little Changed

Production in First Five Months of 1935 Is 2% Over 1934.

From the depression's low of 310,000,000 tons in 1932, the annual output of bituminous coal in the United States rose to 334,000,000 tons in 1933 and to 358,000,000 tons in 1934, the Alexander Hamilton Institute reported.

Production in 1934 was thus 15.3 per cent greater than in 1932, but it was still equivalent to only two-thirds of the pre-depression output of 535,000,000 tons in 1929. So far in 1935, there has been little extension of the recovery movement of the last two years.

Production during the first five months totaled 159,000,000 tons this year as against 156,000,000 tons in the corresponding period last year, an increase of only 2 per cent.

Wage Rate Is Higher.

Average wage rates of bituminous coal miners declined from 65.9 cents per hour in 1929 to 48.0 cents in 1932. Since then, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute, the cut in wage rates has been more than restored. The average during the first four months of 1935 was 71.7 cents per hour.

Changes in the price of bituminous coal since 1929 have corresponded very closely to the changes in wage rates. This has been to the advantage of the mine operators since the increase in efficiency has steadily reduced the unit cost of labor relative to the wage rate.

While wage rates this year were 8.8 per cent higher than in 1929, the unit cost of labor was 19.1 per cent lower than in 1929 as the result of the sharp increase in the output per man-hour. The unit cost of labor during the first four months of this year was thus well below the price level since the price level was at approximately the wage rate level.

The change in the price level in accordance with the change in wage rates instead of in accordance with the unit cost of labor may be accounted for by the curtailment of production. In other words, it was deemed necessary to increase the spread between the price and the unit cost of labor in order to compensate for the lack of volume.

The cost of coal to consumers is already so high that it provides a serious obstacle to a further recovery in output.

Lumber Production Highest in 7 Weeks

New York, July 8.—Lumber production and shipments during the week ended June 29 were the highest in seven weeks, the National Lumber Manufacturers Association reports. New business remained about even with the preceding three weeks. For the first half of the year production was 2 per cent greater than during the first half of 1934; shipments were 26 per cent greater and orders 25 per cent heavier.

Motors Sales Jump in June

U. S. and Foreign Sales Total 181,188 Units in Month.

New York, July 8 (AP).—Sales of General Motors Corporation cars and trucks to consumers in United States during June were 137,782 compared with 109,051 in May and 112,847 in June last year.

Sales to dealers in United States in June were 150,863 units compared with 105,159 in May and 118,789 in the same month last year.

Total sales to dealers in United States and Canada, plus overseas shipments were 181,188 units against 134,597 in May and 146,881 in June, 1934.

June sales in all categories were the best for any June since 1929.

For the first 6 months of the year sales to consumers in United States were 648,835 compared with 494,972 in the like period of 1934.

Sales to dealers in United States were 710,224 units against 592,867 and total sales to dealers in United States and Canada, plus overseas shipments, were 888,560 units against 753,276.

Highlights and Background Of Financial News and Trend

By Carlton A. Shively.

Financial markets continued their recent trends. Treasury bonds were strong and the market was pleased at the new record low rates obtained by a new half billion Federal offer and by a New York State issue. Stocks were firm at the start, turned dull, and then picked up rapidly in the last hour to reach new high levels for industrial stock prices, the ticker tape at one time falling a few minutes behind the floor transactions. At the best prices then ruling gains of 1 to 3 points in leading steel, motor, chemical and other favorite industrial shares were obtained. The turnover was around one and a quarter million shares. Commodities were mixed. Cotton was depressed on a slightly larger crop estimate, but wheat rallied a little. September wheat regained 1⅝ cents a bushel at 80¾ cents.

Stocks gave far more pleasing pictures than disappointments. In spite of the weakness in silver and cotton, and lack of startling news of a bullish nature, steel resumed its old leadership about a point and a half on large turnover. Other steel shares were strong. Motor stocks also hardened. Chrysler made a new high price and General Motors duplicated its best price for the year, made on January 3.

Buoyancy among the steel and motor groups was spoiled a little by hesitancy of rails, cast down by the further decline in Southern railway securities. Southern common and preferred gave up more than a point each, falling to the poorest in two years. Both have lost 50 per cent of their value in the past week. Norfolk & Western was an exception to the rail trend.

Public utilities were irregularly lower, until near the close, when they rallied. Tobaccos continued to advance, with American a feature. Oils, chemicals and foods were mixed during the greater part of the day. The artificial silk group improved. New high prices were made by Allied Chemical, Bullard, Corn Products, General American Transport, Printing Ink, General Refractories, Melville Shoe, Penney, Westinghouse, and Columbia Pictures, which opened up 2 points and then fell 4 on profit taking. Callahan Znic-Lead lost half its market value and touched the worst in three years.

Outstanding stocks included those in the farm implement and mail order groups. Gains of 1 to 2 points were made by Case, Harvester, Deere, Montgomery Ward, Sears Chicago Mail Order and Spiegel May Stern, the rally in wheat helping a little.

Markets were encouraged by the recovery in motor sales last month, as shown by General Motors, and by the rebound in the steel industry's operating rate, following the holiday decline. This week the industry will rise to 35.3 per cent of capacity, compared with 32.8 per cent last week and 27.5 per cent a year ago, according to the American Iron & Steel Institute's estimate. Above a third of capacity the industry can at least break even on its operations, and the comparison with last year shows that we are gaining elevation on the spiral road around the recovery hill.

By its own performance the stock market is showing indifference to current business statistics and confidence in later improvement. Now that the Administration has changed its mind about rushing a new tax bill through this session of Congress without hearings, the new leisure is providing the markets with an opportunity for looking into the future. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau's remarks today on the tax bill were far more illuminating and reassuring than was the President's message of a week or so ago.

Some grist has gone through the tax mill in the meantime. The smear the rich and soak the corporations motif is absent from the Secretary's defense of higher taxes. He speaks rather of the unwisdom of imposing taxes that would retard business recovery, and of the necessity for earmarking revenues from the proposed additional taxes to meet ordinary expenses and to reduce the national debt. Presumably the Secretary at long last has budget balancing in mind, and it can only be hoped that he can keep the President with him.

Not the least interesting of the Morgenthau exposition was that he definitely assured Congress that the emergency has passed. Later remarks by certain congressional leaders indicated that the new idea does not seem to have penetrated far, but the country as a whole is rapidly coming to the realization that no crisis demanding emergency measures on any line of activity is at hand. Once the new deal rids itself of emergency thinking and acting, recovery ought to proceed much more rapidly.

Business is under no delusion about taxation. It knows the Government for a good many years will have to raise much more money in proportion to income, than ever it has done in the past, unless it is to repudiate, through inflation, part of its debt. Equitable and well-balanced taxes are nevertheless demanded.

Store Repairs In 1935 to Be $144,000,000

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

Improvement and modernization expenditures by department stores, dry good and specialty concerns throughout the Nation this year will aggregate approximately $144,000,000, according to a survey announced yesterday by the National Retail Dry Goods Association.

This work will be done by roundly 25,000 stores, whose sales volumes range from less than $50,000 a year to more than $15,000,000.

Outlays will represent an average expenditure of $37,950 per store, or an increase of approximately 48 per cent over expenditures recorded for 1934, when the per store average was $25,484.

Durable Goods Aided.

That the durable goods industries will enjoy a substantial volume of business from this work is indicated by the fact that the improvements will include air-conditioning machinery, modernized fronts and lighting fixtures, escalators and extensive remodeling of display and selling fixtures.

Of the stores studied in the classification "under $200,000," about 53 per cent reported that modernizations were under way or would be undertaken this year.

87 per Cent This Year.

In the group ranging from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 in annual sales volume, more than 87 per cent stated that improvements were scheduled for 1935. The only group which reported a decrease in expenditures as compared with a year ago was that ranging between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000 annual sales volume.

Although the report said that it was impossible to state what percentage of the outlays would cover direct labor costs and what portion cost of equipment and supplies, Channing E. Sweitzer, managing director of the association, said that "the expenditures represent a helpful impetus to both industrial sales and pay-roll earnings."

"The impetus given to business activity by these modernizations is particularly important," Mr. Sweitzer added, "because a great many of these purchases apply to and affect favorably the heavy goods industries."

Commodities Make New Peak

Record Small Increase Over the April Level.

New York, July 8.—Although commodity prices, on the average, advanced in May to a new high peak for the upward movement which began early in 1933, the increase over the April figure was practically negligible. The index, compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and based on 1926 as 100, was 80.2 in May as compared with 80.1 in April with 73.7 in May last year, and with 59.8 at the low for the depression in February, 1933.

Weekly reports indicate that the June index of all commodities will show a recession from the May level due chiefly to lower prices for farm products which have declined on the prospect of a larger harvest this year. According to the Alexander Hamilton Institute, the current weakness suggests that the price rise of the past two years has been halted but it is problematical whether a pronounced price decline will occur immediately. This will depend to a considerable extent on the progress of the crops during the remainder of the season.

If the outlook continues bright for a bountiful harvest and the prices of agricultural products weaken sufficiently to be reflected in lower prices for manufactured goods, a definite price slump may develop before the end of the year.

If it becomes clear that prices are on the downgrade, the tendency will be toward the disposal of surplus stocks which have naturally been accumulated during the past two years of rising prices. Once such a movement is begun, prices will rapidly sink to a lower level.

Such a price decline will lay the basis for an increase in production since it will lessen the present spread between the price level and the level of the national income, which is not sufficient to support both the present price structure and a full volume of output.

Department Store Sales Off.

New York, July 8.—Sales of interstate department stores (West and South) in June amounted to $1,715,491, compared with $1,771,549 in the same month a year ago, a decrease of 3.1 per cent.

Incomes of $5,000 Save Little, Knappen

New York, July 8.—Theodore M. Knappen, economic and political analyst, in an article contained in the current issue of the Magazine of Wall Street observed that: "Income returns show the savings of families having less than $5,000 incomes are comparatively small, and the Nation must depend for its expansion and replacement of capital upon the savings of those with larger incomes. If the present national income were evenly distributed, the savings would be utterly inadequate for maintenance, to say nothing of growth. The larger incomes, therefore, are the mainstay of prosperity. Indeed, they constitute the main foundation for the hope some day everybody will have abundance."

England Sees U. S. Boom as Just Begun

British Economists Assert They Are in Second Prosperity Year.

Whereas, according to certain British economists, the boom has just begup in America, England has entered upon her second year of internal business prosperity, according to the current issue of the Magazine of Wall Street.

During the recovery which followed on the abandonment of the gold standard, England was favored by a low level of raw material prices, coupled with a relatively stable trend in production costs. Although the pound sterling has depreciated in terms of gold by nearly 40 per cent, the statistical gain in the index of wholesale prices has reached only 13 per cent. With this ample margin between cost and prices profits rose with the increase in industrial production.

Contributing directly to this marked improvement in business activity may be enumerated the factors of high tariff protection, the continuance of cheap money, the gradual renewal of confidence in the so-called "investment" industries, notably the building trades, and a larger share, however diminutive, of world trade obtained by British exporters.

The sensational recovery in profit returns which has been shown by the British iron and steel companies reflects the general increase of 20 per cent in the total economic activity of the country since the low point of 1932. British authorities repeatedly emphasized the belief that the tardiness of American recovery may be explained primarily by the governmental attack on profit margins.

If business men fear that the Government is hostile to profit-making enterprise, both working capital and personal savings are hoarded, thereby deflating bank money as fast as it is inflated. This has been the prevailing criticism in England of our economic program up until the recent quashing of the NRA, interpreted abroad as the turning point toward the restoration of business confidence.

On the other hand, it is the considered opinion of many authorities in England that the continuance of the present boom here depends solely on the absence of a fixed parity between sterling and gold. These authorities advocate the necessity of cheap and abundant money for domestic business without interruption over a period of years. Recent indications imply that the Bank of England is not totally in harmony with these views.

Awaiting the institution of a more stable government in France, British and American financial circles have seen fit to support the franc, but this support may conceivably be withdrawn for the purposes of political expediency, thus giving added force to the waves of sentiment for international monetary stabilization.

Visible Wheat Supply Is Higher.

New York, July 8 (AP).—The visible supply of American grain shows the following changes in bushels: Wheat, increased 172,000; corn, decreased 64,000; oats, decreased 117,000; rye, decreased 193,000; barley, decreased 159,000.

Wage Earners Living Cost Is 0.2% Lower

Rents and Sundries Are Up, While Food and Clothing Is Cheaper.

New York, July 8.—Declines in the prices of foods, clothing, and coal outweighed advances in rents and sundries, bringing the cost of living of industrial wage-earners down 0.2 per cent in June from May, according to the monthly survey of the National Industrial Conference Board issued today. This was the second monthly decline, after an extended rise from December, 1934. June living costs averaged 74.9 per cent above those of last year, 13.6 per cent higher than two years ago, but 16.6 per cent lower than June, 1929.

Food prices declined 1.1 per cent from May to June, but were 13 per cent higher than in June, 1934; 27.2 per cent higher than in June, 1933, and 20.6 per cent lower than in June, 1929.

Rents continued their upward trend, rising 0.4 per cent from May to June. They were 8.2 per cent above the level of a year ago, 10.2 percent above that of June, 1933, and 24.0 per cent below that of June, 1929.

Clothing prices were 0.7 per cent lower in June than in May, 3.6 per cent lower than in June, 1934; 20.9 per cent higher than in June, 1933, and 24.1 per cent lower than in June, 1929.

Coal prices showed a further seasonal decline of 0.2 per cent. They were 2.7 per cent lower than a year ago, but 5.5 per cent higher than two years ago.

The cost of sundries rose 0.2 per cent from May to June, in consequence of an increase in the index of carefare and higher prices of smoking material.

The purchasing value of the dollar in June, 1935, was 120.9 cents as compared with 120.6 cents in May, 137.4 cents in June, 1933; 100.8 cents in June, 1929, and 100 cents in 1923.

A Serious Attack on the Constitution

THE Wheeler-Rayburn utility bill is another serious attack on the Constitution. The plain policy of the Administration to force its "must" measures through Congress regardless of whether they are constitutional is seen in President Roosevelt's demand on July 6 that doubts about the constitutionality of the Guffey-Snyder bill should not block its passage. The Guffey-Snyder bill is the fifth major measure of doubtful constitutionality to be placed on the "must" list for passage this session. Others are the A.A.A. and T.V.A. Amendments, the Wagner-Connery labor relations bill, and the Wheeler-Rayburn utility bill.

OATH TO DEFEND CONSTITUTION

The danger of forcing through Congress acts of doubtful constitutionality was stated by William Howard Taft, the only man to be both President of the United States and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court:

> The oath that the Chief Executive takes, and which each member of Congress takes, does not bind him any less sacredly to observe the Constitution than the oaths which Justices of the Supreme Court take.
> The custom of legislators, and executives having any legislative function, to remit to the courts the entire and ultimate responsibility as to the constitutionality of the measures which they take part in passing is an abuse which tends to put the court constantly in opposition to the Legislature and Executive, and, indeed, to the popular supporters of unconstitutional laws.
> If, however, the legislators and the Executive had attempted to do their duty, this burden of popular disapproval would have been lifted from the courts, or at least considerably lessened.

That there are grave doubts about the constitutionality of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill is recognized by many members of both the House of Representatives and the Senate.

UTILITY BILL IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Representative Pettengill of Indiana compared the House and Senate bills: "The 'death sentence' as it now appears in the Senate bill, in my judgment, will crack like an eggshell in the United States Supreme Court . . . The substitute provision in the House bill may also not withstand legal attack. It is difficult for me to find constitutional power in Congress to require a solvent State corporation to dispose of property rights in operating utilities merely because they may not all be within an integrated system."

In regard to the practice of voting for bills of doubtful constitutionality, Senator King of Utah warned his fellow Senators:

> Occasionally the statement is made that Congress may remit to the Supreme Court of the United States measures the constitutionality of which is uncertain and challenged. We have subscribed to an oath to maintain and defend the Constitution of the United States, and the obligation, it seems to me, rests upon us to withhold our assent to any measure that bears the taint of unconstitutionality.

The Wheeler-Rayburn bill bears the taint of unconstitutionality. The House version is merely less drastic than the Senate version. The former says the Securities and Exchange Commission may abolish holding companies; the Senate bill says it must. Both bills usurp the rights of the States and take away from individuals the right to manage their own business.

SENATORS SHOULD HAVE SACRED REGARD FOR THEIR OATH

The Wheeler-Rayburn utility bill is another major attempt to attack and undermine the Constitution. Your Senators and Representatives have taken an oath to maintain and defend the Constitution.

Wire them to consider their oath carefully and to vote against the Wheeler-Rayburn bill unless they themselves believe in it and are conscientiously convinced of its constitutionality. The Constitution has protected our liberties for 150 years. It has enabled us to build the greatest nation in the world, in which there is greatest liberty for the individual. Isn't it worth fighting for?

'Rebel' Arrives In D. C. Today For Exhibition

The Rebel, new streamlined, Diesel-powered express train of the Gulf Mobile & Northern Railroad, will arrive in Washington from Baltimore this afternoon to be on exhibition at the Union Station.

Pulled by its powerful locomotive, which is capable of traveling 100-miles an hour, the Rebel is the first train of its type to be put into regular service in the South. Its run will be from New Orleans to Jackson, Miss., a distance of 480 miles.

PWA funds built the Rebel, which is made up of four air-conditioned cars with a seating capacity of 152 in the day coaches and the lounge.

It is spot welded, a process which eliminates all bolts and rivets. The train is powered by a 660 horsepower engine, mounted over front trucks.

E. W. Goslee, assistant general freight agent of the Gulf, Mobile & Northern, will be in charge of the train. The exact hour of the public exhibition was not announced yesterday, but it will be some time after 3 p. m.

At the same time the Rebel arrives, the first stainless steel coal car will go on exhibition on Track 12 of the Union Station.

The car is made of a steel alloy, which, because of its greater strength, permits the use of thinner plates, thus reducing weight.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY Count, Go! By Harry J. Tuthill

What a world. One day Hartford is razzed for robbing our Mr. Whiskers, and the next day certain people want him parked in the hooseegow for finding the papers.
I saw it. And yet Mother talks about taking rabbits out of a hat, and all that.
If those papers were so important, why did this Count leave them lying in his room as though they were just an old pair of leaky galoshes?
Such a mess.
I never did like this Mr. Whiskers. That beaver he pushes in your face while arguing makes him look too much like a demonstrator for some grow-your-own-mattress idea.
Well now that he has his papers, the first thing he should do is muscle himself out of here. I don't know where he'll go, but if he asks me, I'll suggest that his first stop should be a barber shop.

Suit and Notrump Slams.

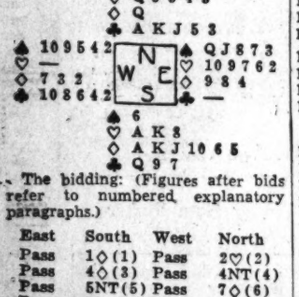
It is better to bid a Grand Slam in a suit than in notrump when there is any possible doubt of the contract's being made. At suit bids it is often possible that one or two extra tricks can be won by ruffing, whereas at notrump those ruffing possibilities would not be present.

But the notrump Slam does remove one or two of the hazards of the Slam which is bid with a trump suit. In the first place, at notrump the danger of a bad break in the trump suit is eliminated. In the second place, the declarer who plays a Grand Slam at notrump need not fear that one of the defenders is void of a side suit and can ruff one of his Aces.

A Major Tragedy.

Today's deal ranks as one of the major tragedies of the game, but despite his bad fortune South has some reason to hold himself accountable. At notrump the tragedy would not have occurred.

East, Dealer
Both sides vulnerable



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

East	South	West	North
Pass	1◇(1)	Pass	2♡(2)
Pass	4◇(3)	Pass	4NT(4)
Pass	5NT(5)	Pass	7◇(6)
Pass	Pass(7)	Pass

1—A powerful hand, but short of a two-bid.
2—Though the club suit is stronger in top cards, North properly shows the higher ranking suit first. By bidding one more than necessary, he properly forces to game and shows his hand contains at least 3½ honor-tricks.
6—North can now count 13 tricks with almost complete assurance. South has six diamonds and the Ace of hearts, and North has four immediate top honors. He knows that if the heart suit is not solid South can probably ruff out the clubs and thus develop the two additional tricks which would be necessary. North's bid is quite correct for he does not know that South holds the King of hearts as well as the Ace.
7—South should not have passed. If North was strong enough to bid the Grand Slam in diamonds, South can be assured of having at least 13 top cards in the combined hands. South should have bid seven notrump, thus saving himself from the danger of either six diamonds in one hand against him or a first round ruff of some side suit.

The Play.

Having criticized South's final pass, I must hestitate to say that despite his error South did not deserve the hideous punishment which befell him. West, realizing it was hopeless to expect East to have an honor-trick, made the only opening lead in which he felt East might be able to ruff. He led a low club and to his delight East ruffed. East returned a heart and West pounced on it with a trump. From then on the defense was automatic and until East had ruffed three club leads and West three heart leads, poor South could not take a trick.

On the Air Today

Mr. John Q. Citizen, in passing The Post Building on his way to a noon sandwich yesterday, settled the matter of whether the United States should intervene in the Italian-Ethiopia situation. Mr. Citizen said "no."

The question inaugurated the "Curbstone Queries" daily program from in front of The Post Building. Harris Hull, The Post's Postilion, was the interviewer, aided by numerous radio and newsmen, most of whom were on hand more to see the fun than to stage a sidewalk broadcast.

• • • •

Everyone seemed to have a good time, few persons in the crowd about the microphone requiring urging to express an opinion. This noon the second curbstone querying will be directed along a popular channel: "What do you think of Joe Louis' chances of becoming heavyweight champion?" Bill McCormick, Post box fight and rassle scribe, will tote the microphone.

Washington's announcers will be particularly careful of their diction this week. The winner of the Kaufman Trophy for the best commercial announcer in town will be selected next week. The boys have until the 15th to impress the judges with their superlative attributes.

Louis Prima's much talked of scat-style music, WJSV, 7:45...N. T. G. and His Girls, presenting Jack Dempsey and Hannah Williams Dempsey, in a premiere, WMAL, 8:00...Nellie Tayloe Ross talks on "Baby Bonds," WRC, 4:30...Variety, abroad "Monarch of Bermuda" on first night out, WOL, 8:30.

• • • •

Despite a drizzle which developed into a light summer rain before the broadcast ended, the first WMAL-Post sidewalk interrogating captured and held the fancy of the lunch-hour crowd. "Curbstone Queries" is one radio diversion in which young and old, men and women, clerk and executive all can take part. Incidentally, if you have a question you would like propounded in this new ten-minute cross-section of public opinion, just address it to "Curbstone Queries," care of The Post.

Arthur, of the Godfreys, announced last week he would pay five dollars for acceptable ideas adaptable to his Gazette show. So help us, this letter was the first contribution: "Dear Cousin Arthur, when you was over to my house you stated you would pay $5 for any idea submitted to your radio program. Here's my idea: 1st, no classical music; 2d, no advertising; 3d, no jazz. Just silence! My sister Fanny thinks this is good. Your cousin, Lizzie Twitch. P. S. If my idea doesn't rate five iron men, would it rate your photo with your collar open at the throat?"

Rudy Vallee, Abe Lyman, Black and Sully and other luminaries have accepted invitations for the opening of a new something-or-other at Jack Dempsey's restaurant tonight at 10:30, heard locally over WOL...
